APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE. It is suggested that a plebiscite be taken upon the question as to whether the senate should be abolished or reformed. The Montreal Star would ascent to the proposition if it were amended and made double barrelled, embracing two points, (1) whether the people desired it to be permanently off guard, (which no one advises or aske), and (2) whether it should be constitutionally empowered to amend supply nearly one hundred invitations, all of Meggait, Brantford, while the The heroics of Sir Mackenzie Bowell and his colleagues are not appreciated since it is evident that they are influenced by party emotions, and often preceded by lofty mutterings of the most partizan character.

The senate needs reforming, but how? Only by election. Would the men who are rejected, when candidates for election to the commons, be sent to the senate if the people had a voice in the matter? Would others, aged and infirm, and having to be wheeled about, weak in physique and perhaps in intellect, be continued in office and allowed to thwart the popular will if the electors had anything to say about it?

The friends of the senate as it stands are very gushing with their propositions, their talk of a plebiscite, but they are evading the issue. No one honestly deeires the senate to be crippled in its ty bunch of roses. exercise, righteously, of legislative power, but he wants it to be free of partizanship, as it would be were it evenly balanced, and had to meet the people and give an account of its stewardship from time to

THE ELECTION TRIALS.

The tory party are disturbed by the re sult of the meeting at which it was decided that only seventeen election petitions should go to trial. It has been asked by what right a number of legal gentlemen got together and reached this conclusion. By the right of appointment. They had been retained as counsel, and they had to be governed by the facts. The judges were desirous of knowing just what special work they had to prepare for. And they had a right to know whether seventy or seventeen election cases were going to trial.

A peculiar thing is the attitude of Mr. Whitney, who both before and after this meeting of the legal gentlemen, and of this agreement, declared that there would rice, where they will spend the day, and be no saw-offs, so far as he knew, to any protests that had been entered. "No protest," said he, "has been made on the conservative side without due consideration and ample evidence to carry it through, and the cases will be pushed to the end. But he was talking for effect, and without a knowledge of all the circumstances. The conservative lawyers made arrangements for as many trials as they could. There may be further appointments, as evidence is given on which to found them, though one good conservative print has been good enough to call this "guff." It is a significant expression, and will not be appreciated by the Kingston conservatives, whose petition is still hanging fire, presumably because they have not submited the evidence that warrants the sending of it for trial.

There is no better conservative paper in But what the country really needs most Ontario than the Hamilton Spectator, and is some way to send a telegram without a it remarks that "no man in Ontario ever expected that the sixty-two protests, or any considerable number of them, would ever go to trial, and the saw-off is no sur price." Not even to Mr. Whitney? What a gay deceiver he must be, then ! dents resulting from the practice of

The stories told by these Christian agitators were pure coinages of the imagination, plain every day people call them lies, and they were invented for the sole purpose of alarming timid people and thus influencing them to vote to keep this city under the thumbs of the cranks who for a long time had controlled it. Every man and woman now within its corporate limits know that these men were designedly false prophets, and when next the agitators seek to enforce their ancient blue law logic, whether it be on behalf of prohibition or any other fad, it will be safe, sound policy to act contrary to their advice. Walks 917 Miles In 112 Days

Beaumont, Tex., Journal. People who were on Crockett street yesterday may have noticed an aged man wending his way toward the post office, a stout stick being his support. He was an odd looking character. White hair denoted extreme age and his step was somewhat unsteady, but his figure was upright with indications of vigor, and, though drawn, there was a rugged look on his face and his eyes were lustrous. Across the traveller's shoulders were strapped two large canvas packages which hung in front; a large water canteen hung by strape to l back. His name is Buckingham, a shoe maker by trade, and he is now nearly ninety-one years old. He came from Paso to Beaumont and walked every foot of the way, carrying water and provisions while travelling through the deserted country along the Mexican border. From Mr. Buckingham no details of his journey could be obtained except that he left E Paso on Feb. 10th, of this year, and made the trip in easy stages, arriving at seven o'clock yesterday morning. The distance from Beaumont to El Paso is 917 miles. Buckingham was 112 days in walking the distance and covered an average of eight and one-fifth miles per day of twenty-four hours, which is pretty fair walking for a man of less than ninety years of age. Buckingham may not be aware of the fact, tofore been equalled and probably will never be excelled. A Valuable Invention.
