Whoever has attempted the heart-breaking operation of stuffing this year's dress sleeves into last year's coat wil not wonder that the favorite cloak of the season has no sleeves at all, but gets chese just the same by means of a generous cape covering the huge arm-holes. With such a garment length of skirt is a necessity; it may be trimured or enlivened with a yoke—say of white satin upon dahlia velvet, and sparkling jet upon the satin-border with bands of fur which diverge all the way down its length to the ground. Such a cloak will have at the collar a roll of fur so high that the wearer can with difficulty look over it.

The problem of wearing this year's cloak over next year's gown won't present itself, if one indulges in one these perishable glories of satin and fur and passementerie. It seems like a conspiracy on the part of the milliners to bankrups their patrons; but doubsless milliners have seemed always to be doing that since long before Napoleon locked up the Empress Josephine's most subtly successful modiste in a fit of desperation at her bills, bills, bills! Gray Hair.

American women in this last generation have discovered that at twenty-five down to the present century, tribute was | their soft, well-groomed, richly colored hair has a most distressing way of turning gray. Whether this is the result of too much higher education, or bothering feminine brains unduly over problems our sensible grandmothers left to time and an all-wise Providence to settle, or the multiplicity of duties, social, political, financial and domestic, the modern damsel and matron feel called upon to consider and fulfil, no one can say. For a time, in deed, these gray hairs have greatly troubled the feminine population, until lately the matter has been settled by gray hair becoming markedly the fashion, -not only the fashion but the rage; and the grayer one's head shows, the more acutely one is envied by one's sisters, who now, in stead of dipping their locks in "veird syrops" to turn the natural hair to gold or red, use alcohol to bleach away nature's own dye of brown or black. SCIENCE AND AMUSEMENT.

Magical Performance With a Pipe. A very interesting and quite simple experiment can be performed with a clay pipe, the object being to knock off the heel or projection under the bowl, from a distance. The feat may be accomplished in the following manner: Break a short piece off the end of the stem and place i on the edge of a table, over which it should project slightly as in the illustration. Ask any one present to stand opposite you, and hold the pipe in a slightly oblique position by resting his hand on the table and introducing his little finger into the bowl, as indicated. Make sure that your end of the stem is in a direct line with the stem on the pipe, a fact which er, location and number of persons in statecan be readily determined by the eye. room Having ascertained this, all you have to do is to give the projecting end of the bit of pipe-stem a smart stroke with the palm of the hand. If your arm is true, the missife will slide along the table and up the pipe-stem until it reaches the heel, which it will knock neatly off, leaving the bowl and stem intact. A little practice will help you to perform this curious feat with ease. It never fails to excite the astonishment of spectators.

"I wonder if it has to be done up on paper every night like my sister does hers?" "And see her eyes that go to sleep," gasped a little girl who had never owned anything hair is hanging down her back," sung hair is hanging down her back," sung hair is hanging down her back, as he joined the admission of the state of companions. She sneered at the plain Quaker dolls and turned up her nose at the ordinary dolls. She wouldn't even glance at the Esquimaux in his suit of white fur. She turned her back on the Japanese doll and the black mammy If you want the Cheapest doll, in her white cap and apron, with the tiny white baby in her arms, she considered entirely beneath her notices and horrors! that rag doll in the corner. she was ashamed to be seen even in the same window with her. But what do you suppose was the fate of the prize doll, and what do you suppose was the fate of the rag doll? A very wealthy gentleman bought the prize doll for his little daughter, but she had so many toys and dolls that she soon tired of her new pet
