that one is so often obliged to listen to. M. Rucquoy, on the flute, proved him self a thorough master of that not very sympathetic instrument, achieving some wonderful effects which led to his being heartily encored. The addition of the flute obligato to Madame Albani's singing of "Sweet Bird" was a must enjoyable one, and greatly increased the effect of the solo. A word of sympathy must be said for the pianist, Ernest Schelling. He rendered his difficult and classical numbers with much brilliancy of technique and considerable feeling; and it is a thousand pities that the audience could not at least show him the ordinary politeness of listening eilence. The Chopin Impromptu and Etude were entirely spoiled by the entrance of late-comers, who appeared cheerfully indifferent to the fact that they were disturbing the performance; the second number was scarcely less cavalierly receiv ed; and the Liszt Rhapsodie, with which Mr. Schelling brought the programme to a close, was apparently tolerated as an interruption to the process of collecting wraps, etc., and preparing to go home. This is surely unfair treatment. A pianist ought not to be looked upon merely as a useful person to fill up gaps and introduce
