good old gory fights because the other lions belonging to Mme. Poisson's show were of the enarling and not the fighting variety. It became necessary, therefore, to procure a simon pure African roarer, and orders AT COST FOR were promptly given to a well known foreign dealer to have such a one shipped to Mme. Poisson at New York. The Lion arrived at that port the other day, and Mme. Poisson traveled all the way from her Central American home to receive the king of beasts and superintend its transshipment for Guatemala. This is how they conduct the fights: In the middle of the arena they place two cages, one of them 80 feet square and 21 Varias feet high and the other about one-fifth as large. The bull has the freedom of the large cage, and the lion works himself into a frenzy in the smaller one. As soon as the lion has acquired a thorough and deep the lion has acquired a thorough and deep rooted dislike to that bull they throw open Japans. the door of his cage and let him at his antagonist.

Mme. Poisson says she never in all her experience saw a bull whip a lion, and her word may be taken for it that most of the stories of the demolishment of the king of beasts by bulls, more or less admirably horned or heeled, are apooryphal. In Guatemala the people are so enthusiastic over these fights that they sometimes break down the inclosure in which the engagement takes place in order to see the lion chew the bull up.
