ITS POLITICAL SIGNIFICANCE

He is Said to Mayo Expressed the Intention of Withdrawing From the Raring Field France and England - Crispi of Ruly a Changed Man,

LONDON June 11 .- Lord Rosebery has orivately antrounced his intention to withdraw from the racing field. Public statement of the fact will be made known here in a few days. The ourrent belief that the victory of his colt Ladas was worth many thousands of votes at the coming election has had general expression in the newspapers, but the Premier's trusted advisers have made very different representa-tions to him. They have been furnished with statistics of the really terrific extent to which gambling over horse races has they kepyrighted the photograph. The grown in England. The very men who now preach at the Prime Minister know when they acclaimed him as their leader that he was a racing man. His real offence seems to consist not in racing, but in having won the Derby. All the party managers admit that Rosebery's character as an honorable, highly successful sportsman, endorsed as it was last week by the victory of the horse upon which the masses had put their money, will stand him in good stead with thousands of electors who do not care a cent for polities but vote ac-

Mr. Asquith, having volunteered to act as mediator between the cab owners and drivers, several conferences have been held at which delegates from both were present. No result has yet been reached. Minor differences have been composed, the owners giving way on several points which they think important. The question of price remains. Premier Crispl's Retirement. Europe's chronicle week by week gathers up new tales of parliamentary crises and national upheavals like a rolling snowball. Crispi is said suddenly to have broken down in nerve and become all at once an infirm and purposeless old man, quite in capable of sustaining the part of practical dictator, which he assumed last winter with such a light heart. People had forgotten that he was 75, so virile and ambitious and masterful he seemed. But his physical and mental collapse now is privately reported to be at the bottom of this newest phase of the general Italian smash. Apparently there is the greatest confusion as to whose task it should be to try and grasp the reins dropped from his hands, and there is no belief in any quarter that an Amprovement on the existing chaos is possible. Vatican politicians and the aristocratic set closest to the Queen are everywhere suspected and in some quarters openly accused of intrigues against Crispi, which not only have destroyed him, but have rendered the work of any successor hopeless.

The copyright problem has assumed a more acute phase in another direction, and last week a meeting of zincographers, stereotypers and electrotypers was held at which an organization was formed to agitate for changes in the law. All the photographers are using the copyright laws to their advantage—an American actress had her photograph taken in six different poses by a Regent' street house, devoting half a day towards seeing the work properly turned out. As soon as the firm printed from negatives actress wished to have the photos reproduced in a sonvenir programme and gave them to a process company, the manager of which seeing the word "copyright" upon the original told her that he could not reproduce them without permission of the owner of the copyright, and the upshot of it was that she had to pay the photographic company three guineas for the right to use her own pictures. Skatch of His Successful Joutnalistic and Edmand Vates, one of the most accomwould have been sixty-three years old in July of 1894 had he fived until then. He will long be remembered as the inventor of society journalism and the founder some twenty years ago of the London World, a paper which was the first of its kind, and which, while mainly devoted, like its more recent rivals, to topics of a purely personal kind, has always maintained a high reputa-tion for dignified management as well as for literary excellence. Edmond Yates was the son of Frederick n Edinburgh in 1831. His father had Adelphi Theatre, then the home of melodrama. Some of Dickens' works were

The boy tasted the sweets of London life when he was but a fledgling. The Marquis of Clanricarde, an old friend of his father, on being appealed to by Mrs. in houses near by, both said to be mortally Yates, found him a clerkship in the post wounded, having been shot through the office. He was then about sixteen years thighs. The strikers refused to give the old. At an early age young Yates resolved to become a literary man, being moved to memoirs, by the reading of Thackeray's "Pendennia." He longed to become one of that cheery band which comprised Sala, Jerrold, Shirley Brooks, Oxenford et id genus omne, and it was not long before he made his maiden effort.

It was not until Albert Smith took him up that he made any advance on the stony road of his choice. In the year 1854 Mr. Yates made the acquaintance of Dickens. He called on him at Tavistock House and the novelist became one of his warmest friends. Yates now begame one of the little crowd of writers whom Charles Dickens drew round him in the early days of Household Words. He published, collaboration with Mr. Frank Smedley, a volume of floating verse entitled "Mirth and Metre by Two Merry Men," which captivated the town. He was also permanently engaged as dramatic critic on the staff of the Daily News, a post which he held for six years, and became editor of Temple Bar and Tinsley's Magazine, He afterward came to tife United States on a lecturing tour, the story of which he afterward told in his memoirs. As continental correspondent of the New York Herald he visited most of the leading capitals of Eu-

When Temple Bar, a popular monthly was begun, Mr. Yates was its editor, and continued to hold that position until 1867. Some years later he started the World which proved enormously successful, and of which he remained proprietor and editor to the last. Some strongly worded financial articles from the pen of Mr. Labouchere brought it prominently into notice, and its position once established it never lost ground. It has had many imitators, but with the exception of Truth has never had a serious rival.

Edmund Yates' best known works are novels of English and Continental life containing a series of well drawn characters always calculated to elevate our ideas of men and women. But Mr. Yates, like Thackeray, depicted life as he saw it, not The Pope's attitude toward cremation as he would imagine it, and hence if some was announced on Wednesday in the of his characters are more noted for force Catholic diocesan council of Broisgan, and individuality than for amiability or opinion is that cremation, while good morals, the plea that he is reflecting room. Cheery, clever and good natured he has left behind him a host of friends. For some time past Mr. Yates has lived at Brighton, where he had a handsome mansion on the esplanade, overlooking the sea. Here he preferred to live rather than in the turmoil and gloom of London, and from here he used to edit his paper, one of the weekly features in which was a charming paper of reminiscences signed
