The yacht is conveyed to St. John, N.B., where his for a syndicate, at the head of which is Lord Provost Bell, of Glasgow. Mr. Bell, it will be remembered, was the nominal owner of the Thistle, which, however, really belonged to a syndicate of Clyde yachtsmen. The syndicate building the new boat is practically the same as that which ran the Thistie. "Watson has designed the new yacht, and has, I am told, guaranteed that she will beat the Brittania. She is being built by Fife, of Fairlie. "For some reason or other my informant told me, absolute secrecy is being whereabouts will kindly leave word at this preserved regarding the new boat. I cannot guarantee the truth of these statements. I am repeating, and I give the story merely as a bit of racontage. which may possibly have no foundation may have. Time will tell."
