BROADBRIM'S LETTER.

ONCE A MILLIONAIRE BUT DIED A TRAMP.

The Wife Fled With an Unsightly Gorgon—She Clung to him With Unbroken Constancy—Angels Outside, Friends at Home—Borne Back to the House of Childhood.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Feb. 3.—Last week, on the North Brothers Island, the place set apart by the government for infectious diseases, a wretched tramp gave up the ghost, whose miserable end deserves something more than a passing notice. When removed from the old tumbled down tenement in this city, where he was taken sick, he was covered with rags and vermin; yet this man was once a millionaire—handsome of person, a lady-killer too, "the glass of fashion and the mould of form." He was known here for many years as Baron Shultz and had the distinction of being the last husband of Madam Anna Bishop, the great English soprano, who was once the wife of the celebrated composer, Sir Henry Bishop. No woman on the operatic stage in England had made such rapid strides in public favor as Anna Bishop. Blessed, or cursed, as the case may be, with superb personal beauty and a phenomenal voice, she at once became the idol of the most aristocratic circle in England. Her husband had been knighted, and she was held in high favor by the Queen, who at that time was greatly taken with player folk, and who, it will be remembered, only a few years later adopted the only daughter of the distinguished actress, Mrs. Warner, and had her brought up with the royal children—an honor never before accorded to any British subject. It is impossible to imagine a person more delightfully situated than Madam Anna Bishop in the early forties. She had a beautiful home blest with two lovely children, a husband who adored her, and an income derived from the exercise of her husband's ability and her own, which enabled them to support an establishment of almost regal magnificence. In addition to her other accomplishments, which were many, she wanted to learn the harp for the purpose of introducing it in an opera which was especially written for her.

At this time a celebrated harpist appeared in London by the name of Bocha, and he became Madam Anna Bishop's teacher. The difference between them was great; he was past sixty, heavy, fat and cumbersome, his temper was irascible and his manner brutal. Sometimes, when rehearsing with an orchestra, if an unfortunate musician missed a bar or caused a discord he would go into spasms, froth at the mouth and act like a maniac. He had heavy, overhanging brows, and a great, coarse mouth, and was altogether about as unprepossessing a person as one could desire to see. Madam Bishop, on the other hand, was finely shaped, trim built, with a handsome, clear English face that won on you at first sight. Yet, marvel of marvels, this woman with everything to lose and nothing to gain, gave up home, husband and children, all, and fled from England with this unsightly old Gorgon. They came to New York and opened at the old Park theatre, then under the management of Thomas S. Hamblin. The news of their escapade followed them across the ocean. The theater was deserted and the engagement a wretched failure. The unlucky and ill-assorted couple fled to Australia on borrowed funds, and for some years wandered about the antipodes. She also visited Mexico, California and South America. Bocha's temper was uncontrollable and for years before his death he abused her shamefully; but she clung to him with unshaken constancy till his death, which occurred in Australia, and she there raised a magnificent monument to his memory.

Shortly after she met Mr. Schultz, who had made about a million dollars speculating in Australian mines. Schultz was a plunger and he became madly infatuated with the ancient opera singer. She was past sixty and he about forty, but she added him to her previous conquests and they were married. Schultz became her manager, and at her death raised a costly monument to her memory. Some years ago he turned up in New York, and it was not long before he was known to the fast young men of the Tenderloin district. He sported fine turnouts, took an occasional hand at poker and faro, and at one time it was said that he came near breaking John Morrissey's bank. He was seen with fast women in the parks and plunged heavily on the race course, and after a time the end came. The owner of a million once became a hanger-on about low-class saloons, and a patron of free lunch counters. The man who had squandered hundreds of thousands, vainly begged pennies from passing strangers in the streets. Poor, dirty, ragged, this old tramp wandered about the streets, homeless and deserted, who at one time had given grand parties at Delmonico's at a cost of thousands. This week the authorities received notice that an old man was dying in a rookery across town. An ambulance was called and he was taken to Bellevue. His case developed into a malignant form of typhoid fever, and he was removed to the North Brothers' Island, where he died. Potter's field will be his resting place, along with the thousands of unnamed dead. And so passes away another millionaire, who was once the idolized husband of one of the most beautiful and talented women in the world.

The uncertainty of divorce courts was painfully impressed on the plaintiff and her friends in the Langley divorce case in Brooklyn last week. Mrs. Langley sought relief from matrimony on the statutory grounds, and to all appearance made a very strong case. Mr. Langley does not look like a saint; he is a red-faced, beefy-looking man, who has the well-groomed air of a stylish Wall street broker. Feed and drink get all the credit they deserve from his personal appearance. If a person should accuse him of modesty, no doubt Mr. Langley could recover heavy damage in a suit for defamation of character.

Beside the statutory offence, which is the only ground on which an absolute divorce can be gained in the state of New York, Mrs. Langley accused him of brutality and using obscene language in the presence of his children. There is a class of men everywhere, whose good manners appear to be exhausted outside of their own family, and from the evidence Mr. Langley appears to be one of them. Ask any of their associates at the club or on 'Change what kind of fellows they were, and they would tell you at once, first-rate. They are always ready for a swell dinner, never go back on the little game of draw. If any new or breezy sensation from London or Paris turns up at Tony Pastor's or Koster & Bial's, you can generally find them on baldheaded row, in the front. They sport red neckties and flaming boutonnieres, and after the show is over you need not be surprised to find them in some of the private supper rooms on the Sixth avenue with a choice coterie of these foreign female entertainers. In this questionable company they are all smiles and politeness, but when they get home with an aching head and an empty pocket, then comes the wife's share of the entertainment. No pate for her, no truffles, no Pommery Sec or Cliquot, no salad, Vermouth or terrapin. Ah, no; nothing but hard words, often curses, and not unfrequently blows and kicks. It seems hard to believe that a great big burly fellow, calling himself a gentleman, with a fist like a heavy weight boxer, could knock down a weak little delicate woman, and kick her into insensibility when she was down; and yet not a week goes by that I do not see cases of this kind in our courts.

It does not appear that Langley went quite to this extreme, but he swore at his wife and cursed her in the presence of his children, and made her life as miserable as it could be, and yet because the evidence could not be made clear that he had broken the seventh commandment, she was thrown out of court.

When the trial ended there was hardly a doubt in the mind of anyone present that he had not only broken it once but many times, but juries are incomprehensible. Trial by jury is a great institution; the rights guaranteed by the Magna Charta are glorious things to talk about, but as I sit in our civil and criminal courts, day after day, and hear the villainous verdicts brought in by the average jury—verdicts defying law and evidence, I feel as if the whole corrupt system would be better if sunk in the sea, and in its place the venerable Cadi once more sitting at the city gates to deliver his judgment of the right or wrong. God help the poor woman against whom the judgment was given, for the court to which she applied for justice afforded her no protection.

Pitiful, most pitiful, was the sight at the morgue on Wednesday last, where all that was mortal of a young and beautiful woman lay on one of the cold marble slabs. The face was handsome and intellectual, the hands small and delicate, the dress that of a person of means, taste and culture. Heart-sickening were the surroundings; bear by was a tramp, fished up from the freezing, muddy waters of the river; next to him a young mother who had dashed her baby's brains out and then killed herself; there were many others without mark or sign, whose history will not be untolded till the judgment day. But about the beautiful young woman who occupied the front marble slab there was a mystery which for a short time it seemed impossible to unravel. She had been brought there from the residence of Dr. Selden, suffering from the effects of a criminal operation, and died at Bellevue hospital with her secret locked in her cold heart. But nothing long escapes the Argus eyes of the police. In less than twenty-four hours her identity was fixed as that of Miss Margaret Foster Creswell, a teacher of physical culture and a member of one of the oldest and most honored families in Headsaydurg, Pa. The causes that led to her downfall and the author of her ruin are not yet known; but as soon as her identity was established some sorrowing friends arrived in New York and took the remains back to her childhood's home. Dying among strangers, unknown and penniless, with the knowledge of the agony that her shame and blasted honor would leave behind her, hers was a cruel punishment.

One more unfortunate
Weary of breath,
Rashly importunate,
Gone to her death;
Touch her not scornfully,
Think of her mournfully,
Gently, humanly,
Not of the stains on her,
All that remains of her
Now is pure womanly.
Make no deep scrutiny
Into her mutiny,
Rash and undutiful;
Past all dishonor,
Death has left on her
Only the beautiful.
Forgetting her weakness,
Her evil behavior,
And leaving with meekness
Her sins with her Saviour.

A swell club has just started to give us purified drama. Allah be thanked. They gave a performance last week, and on point of the re-ormation for which our souls are grateful, the ladies appeared in the parquette without their two-story and a half hats, and now that almost every lady's opera hat has something on top that looks very suspiciously like a pair of donkey's ears, the absence of the opera hat was a sight to make men and gods rejoice.

The week has been enlivened by a number of sensations, one of the liveliest being the forging on an $80,000 check on an English insurance company by a confidential clerk of ten years service, and a school-boy, who tried to get the check cashed at a hotel in Albany. Both were nabbed within twenty-four hours, and are now in jail awaiting indictment by the grand jury.

That chronic operatic beat, Colonel Mapleson, of Her Majesty's Dirty Buffs, is in town, followed by the remnants of a stranded company that he left upon the road. The record of this unsavory person has been one of disaster and failure in New York, and we hoped that we had seen the last of him years ago. Perhaps death may help us to get rid of him. Nothing else will.—BROADBRIM.

Will You Accept the Offer, Mothers?

Strong, hearty and happy! These grand and very desirable results are obtainable only when Lactated Food is used for the baby.

If baby is cross, restless and peevish, depend upon it, that its food is the cause of every difficulty. Many mothers forget that baby's stomach is a very weak and easily irritated organ. This tender organ, when out of order, throws the whole body into confusion and trouble.

Wise and careful mothers are extremely guarded as to the character of artificial food they use for their little ones. Lactated Food is their choice. Experience proves that it produces the best results in the weak and delicate infant. Medical men recommend it without hesitation, as they have found it is the most reliable for weak digestion.

Every mother in Canada who wishes a sample of the life-giving Lactated Food, can be supplied at once. Send in your Post Office address to the Wells & Richardson Co., Montreal, and you will receive a full sized can, sufficient to make ten pints of cooked food. The baby will enjoy it, and will soon show marked improvement.

Noble Self-Sacrifice.

An ably written sketch of the late Rev. George Boyd, of London appears in the last issue of the "Christian Guardian" from the pen of Rev. Dr. Sanderson. The exalted character of deceased is fervently eulogized. A few lines are here reproduced: "The subject of this sketch was a man of great generosity. Not content with giving a tenth to his God, his liberality exceeded that proportion. On his deathbed he bequeathed a tenth of the insurances on his life to the cause of God. Submitting his wish to do so to his loving wife, whose income would be effected thereby, he said, 'I will not do it if you disapprove.' Being assured by her of her entire concurrence, he replied: 'Then let it be so; the Lord will take care of you and the children.' It was a sublime act, challenging our admiration; an act revealing the man, combining, as it did, unselfish generosity, tender conscientiousness and exalted faith in God."

A Cure For Constipation And Headache.

Dr. Silas Lane, while in the Rocky Mountains, discovered a root that when combined with other herbs, makes an easy and certain cure for constipation. It is in the form of dry roots and leaves, and is known as Lane's Family Medicine. It will cure sick headache. For the blood, liver and kidneys, and for clearing up the complexion it does wonders. Druggists sell it at 50c a package—enough for five weeks.

Fire At Arnprior.

Arnprior had a serious fire on Thursday. It broke out in the confectionery store of A. S. Bertrand, and spread rapidly. The whole block was destroyed. The block was a fine brick structure owned by M. Galvin. It contained five stores, occupied by P. T. Dagenais, clothier; William Russell, barber shop and billiard room; A. S. Bertrand, confectionery; D. G. Campbell, groceries and provisions; A. Menzies, druggist, and the C.M.B.A. hall in the upper story. The Bell telephone company's central office was situated in Menzies' drug store, and was destroyed. The various merchants were partially insured.

When In Despair.

When in despair of being cured of lung troubles, there is still a hope, and a strong hope of perfect cure in Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. This medicine cures even after all others have failed, and no one suffering from coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, hoarseness, etc., need despair of cure while Norway Pine Syrup is obtainable.

skeptic. Mrs. Lloyd writes as follows: "I feel it my duty to tell you what Paine's Celery Compound has done for me. I was always a sufferer from nervous debility and very bad headache, and found it impossible to obtain regular rest and sleep.

Two years ago I read of your Paine's Celery Compound, and bought a bottle of it. After I had used it I found I could get rest and quiet. I have used altogether seven bottles and find myself completely cured.

Your medicine purifies the blood and regulates the system; and I would not be without it in my house if it took my last dollar.

Before using Paine's Celery Compound my weight was only 100 lbs.; now I weigh 141 lbs. Is this not sufficient reason for me to praise the Compound highly?

Before I knew of your valuable medicine I was treated by the doctors, but never received any good. Five of my friends are now using your valuable medicine since they have seen what it has done for me.

I wish to use my statements as they may be of encouragement to others."

Secularizing Churches.

Toronto Times:

How people professing christianity can, by giving church concerts, act in a spirit so diametrically opposite to the many bible injunctions against using churches to make money, is hard to understand. The clergy, with honorable exceptions, do not seem to have sufficient backbone to stand out against the iniquity, while the laity evidently consider that any means for raising money are justifiable, providing the church reaps the cash. An eminent writer on this subject has said: "The object of church music is to assist in the worship of the Almighty, to fill the mind of the hearer with religious feelings, to raise his thoughts above all earthly considerations." If the average church concert does this—the concert where the audience laugh, applaud, encore and conduct themselves generally as at any ordinary concert—the fact is never apparent.

Judge Armour's Precedent.

Judge Armour is a bluff and independent old gentleman who never allows himself to be inconvenienced by the bar. When a too inquisitive counsel undertakes to interrogate him as to whether he will or will not adjourn for lunch, or as to whether he will or won't hold an evening session, the limb of the law is liable to be sat upon. There is an amusing tradition in this vein:

"Will your lordship hold court to-morrow?" queried the counsel blandly, leaning over to the bench in a confidential attitude during a pause in the case.

"Yes. Why shouldn't I hold court to-morrow?" retorted his lordship testily.

"It is Good Friday, my lord."

"Well what if it is. Haven't I got one of the highest precedents on earth for holding court on Good Friday?"
