"I keep under my body." He was glad that he had been invited o say a word to the campers on the shore of the now world-famed River St. Lawrence. Being a lover of sports himself he liked to speak to people who see the necessity and feel the need of physical recreation. He was pleased to know that the order of the day had not been forgotten. People ought to remember who it was that had made so many avenues of recreation for the pleasure of the beings whom He had created. This was a materialistic age, when men thought more of the present and less of Inture. Consequently it is a selage. How offensive must ingratitude appear in the sight of the all perfect One. In ancient times the nations that were the mightiest and shone most prominently were the nations that thought of the bodies, and paid attention to physical training. Paul meant to say that man was something more than body; he had mind and soul. No man could be perfectly developed unless those parts were attended to properly. There will be nineteen cance races this week. The war canoes will not be here. The Montrealers have decided that it is no use to come and compete against themselves, when Toronto and other places will not compete. The war cance race is accordingly called off.

The campers celebrated a big bon fire on the open green last night. Each member contributed a stick to the blaze, and the scene from a distance looked like a raging conflagration. Sacred songs were sung by the ladies and young men and an enjoyable time was spent. There is an American and British flag loating in front of the commodore's tent. One of Col. After the man was given up for lost the captain rowed to shore to ascertain what facts he could about him: He learned that his name was Willis Miles, of Cincinnatti, Ohio, and that he was visiting his mother and sister, who were stopping at the park Miles was a man of about thirty years of age and it was told Capt. Nicholson that he was hard of hearing. The accident occurred about three o'clock and after dinner. There was only a light breeze blowing and it did not take much skill to handle the boat as long of rather heavy build. He sank in about 130 feet of water.
