Protecting The Streets.

The streets committee, at its meeting last evening, instructed the chairman to enquire from the city commissioner why he was not protecting the streets from the encrosedments of every kind. It was pointed out that a by-law existed permanent erections upon them, and that in defiance of this by-law several people, in different parts of the city, had built entrances to their houses. steps, and landings and porches, which cannot be tolerated under any circumstances. The idea prevails that what one man can do another can do, and so to the world's fair, as soon as things get instead of an attraction to the city, sight-seeing.
