THE OLD SCIENTIST AMONG HIS BOOKS AND FLOWERS.

Life of Thought and Study in the Retreat at Hodesloa-Characteristics of the Man-His Work in the World of Science -The Honors He has Won.

Prof. Huxley has long advocated the healthgiving properties of the air on the Somez Coast, but it is only within the last few years that he has given up his of quarters in Marlborough Palace, St. John's Wood, and taken possession of the house especially built for him at Eastbourne. .It was designed for him by the husband of his eldest daughter and rejoices in the quaint title of "Hodesles" the early English form of the name of Huxley. The house is not in the town itself, but stands in its own garden on the rising ground toward Beathy Head, where the green slopes of the Sussex flowns stretch out as a fair background to its brick walls and tiled roof. Within the doors are comfortable homely rooms where the portraits of many members of the Huxley family adorn the walls -some few are painted by themselves, but most of them are the work of another sonin law, the Hon. John Collier, and many are familiar to the public who have seen them

PROP. HUXLEY. sons and daughters are all married now, but it very rarely happens that one or an other of them is not on a visit to "Hodes lea," while the grandchildren are ever in request and have their own particular marters and cosy nursery. And what of the most interesting room in the house, the study of the great man First of all, it is full of sunlight, streaming in through the wide window that looks out over the garden, and through a second smaller window, built in an apse, and whose colored panes cast all manner of quaint shadows upon the rows and rows of books that seem to fill every nook and cor-

Long shelves line all the walls, literally from floor to ceiling; books, books, books, books of all sorts and in every variety of binding; they are piled on the broad surface of the dark oak table, on the chairs and even the floor has its share of bulky volumes and pamphlets innumerable. Alhas collected books all his life; indeed, he tells you, these are not nearly all that he possesses; they have overflowed into several rooms upstairs, and even then serious thoughts were entertained of building out a library especially to hold the remainder, when Mr. Collier offered to give them house room and carried off a van load back to

He is rather above the middle height, sparely built and upright; perhaps his most striking features are the very bright black eyes that meet and seem to look through those of anyone to whom he is speaking; they are set wide apart and deep beneath the grey eyebrows; the forehead is square, the iron-grey hair brushed straight back from the temples.

White whiskers frame in the lower part of the face and accentuate the squareness of the chin, firmly molded into an expression that would be stern and almost defiant, but for the extreme mobility of the lips. The nostrils are wide and sensitive, the whole face, somewhat rugged, but constantly lighted up by the smiling lips or by a very characteristic twinkle of fun in the dark oyen.

Thomas Henry Huxley was born in 1825 in what was then the tiny village of Ealing (new a big London suburb), inheriting from his mother her strong characteristics, both physical and mental, her bright dark eyes and her remarkable rapidity of thought; he derived from his father a large share of tenacity and strength of purpose; a hot temper, (this latter statement all, and they are many, who have experienced his unfailing kindliness and good nature, will qualify with this addition, 'Under great provocation,") and an innate faculty for drawing, which he has never really cultivated, athough in his youth he was famous for making caricatures insum: erable, alike of professors and fellowstudents, when he ought to have been taking notes; and even in his own professoral days there is a story told of amicable aquabbles among the royal commissioners for the Huxley sketches-the rough but spirited designs with which his share of the reports were plentifully besprinkled. His schooldays were very short, and as he appears in those days to have had the greatest distast to application, they may be said to have been unsatisfactory. He was only 14 years of age when, much against his will, he commenced the study of medicine, under the guidance of a relation; his own earnest desire having always been to become a mechanical engineer. Medicine, as a healing art, possessed no attractions for him, but physiology, the "mechanical engineering of human beings," as he calls it, soon became an engrossing study, and in 1845 he took his M. B. at London University, with honors in physiology, and was appointed assistant surgeon at Haslar Hospital. Here he worked some months under Sir John Richardson, the well-known Arctic traveler, who ultimately obtained for young Huxley a post on H. M. S. Rattlesnake, then bound on a long voyage to the northern and eastern shores of Australia. The voyage lasted four years, during which time the ship was almost completely cut off from all communications with home, and was, indeed, for months at a time, ontside the pale of all civilization. In 1849 an elaborate paper was received from him by the Boyal Society, and by that body printed and published, although the young author, still cruising on the high seas, remained in ignorance of the gratifying fact until his return to England at the end of the following year.

In 1854 Mr. Huxley was married, after an engagement that had lasted eight years, to the gettle lady to whose companionship so much of the bappiness and brightness of the Eastbourne house is due, and at the same time he severed his connection with the naval medical service and was appointed professor of natural history and paleontologist at the School of Mines in Jermyn street. This post he originally accepted as a temporary one until he should obtain a vacant professorship either of physiology or comparative anatomy. He held it, however, for not less than 31 years, the College of Sergeons did elect him their professor of comparative anatomy. As early as the year 1852 he delivered his first public lecture to a Friday evening lience at the Royal Institution; in 1850

he became Croonian lecturer, taking as his subject "The Theory of the Vertebrate ingmen, "On Man's Place in Nature His Relations to the Lower Animals," and "On the Origin of Species," which had recently appeared. Then several important works were published in rapid specession while universities and learned societies, both at home and abroad, contended for the honor of enrolling him among their members. It is only a few days since he kissed hands at Osborne on receiving the title of "The Right Honorable" as a member of her Majesty's Privy Council. He enjoys the distinction of being the first Privy Couneillor to attain that honor without previousby holding some political appointment. Mrs. Langtry, nee Emelie Charlotte Le Breton, was born on the Isle of Jersey in 1853. She married Edward Langtry and became famous as a beauty in London. There was a loss of estate, and then good fortune beckoned her to the stage and later on she came to America.

Mrs. Langtry had appeared at Twicken-ham on November 19, 1881, as the young widow in "A Fair Encounter," but her professional debut was made at the Haymarket Theatre as Miss Hardcastle in "She Stoops to Conquer." She was soon thereafter seen in "The Honsymoon" and "An Unequal Match," and as Bosslind in Hero, steamer Mani, steamers Ocean and Per-

She then went on a tour, but on April 24, 1883, she began two weeks at the Fifth Avenue Theatre as Galatea. She sailed for | intermediate ports. Europe, and the people of London renewed their faith in her. She was in London in 1885, playing "La Princess George" January 20, "Lady Teazle" February 10, "Peril" April 6, "Enemies" January 28, 1886, and "The Lady of Lyons" March 18. She reappeared in New York at the Fifth Avenue Theatre in "The Lady of Lyons" October 16, 1886. Later in the season, December 6, she 'was at Niblo's where "Enemies" was produced. "As in a Looking Glass" was her new piece for the season beginning September 19, 1887, at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. HER HOME LIFE.

Even in the freedom of the nursery or of her private home life nothing ever pleased Mrs. Langtry that was not refined and well bred. Instead of being imperative and ceremonious there was a constant fund of womanliness, and what is rarer yet, pure fun. The fun of a speech, or a situation, or yet only of an idea, was never lost to her, but was, ten to one, brought out with a single touch for others to enjoy. She did not tell many stories, but instead there was a smiling "I remember" that was

Mrs. Langtry ap preciated the first and most important duty of womankind-the care and development and protection of herself. When she did not feel as fresh as she might, when things worried her and she knew she was not in good trim physically she walked fast and Walking, strangely enough, was the one way for her to keep thin. But walking -ah, that," she said, "is what does a woman good." It was so with her complexion. If she felt that that did not please her, then, indeed, she walked, and walked often. It was the one thing to do. She did not believe in a woman using anything on her face for beautifying pur-She wore the prettiest gowns-of course Paris gowns almost without exceptionand from the soft, loose, fur trimmed morning gowns to her handsomest dinner dress there was never a tone wrong. One of her favorite dresses was a long, loose gown of Nile green poplin, trimmed with ong white fox fur. It was bought when all English women were buying poplins and with the STRAMERS FOR NIAGARA from country to Ireland. Mrs. Landers FALLS, Buffalo, St. Catherines etc.

donnell Ave., Toronto, Ont., Canada Please mention this paper. Zola Justified. When M. Zola wrote his repulsive story of French pensant life, it was said that such things as he described could not be. But a case which has just been tried at the assizes in the department of the Taru shows that in La Terre" we have unfortunately only too true a picture. An old man named Veyrios had ceded his farm to his son, stipulating that he should have food and lodging. He was immediately placed in the worst room of the house and starved by his brutal son. One day the younger Veyrics asked his father to come to the stable and help him to move a large empty tub. As the old man stooped down, his son pusked him into the tub and turned it over. Then he put heavy atones on it and locked the stable door. After three days he again went to look, and finding his unhappy father still alive he strangled him. The son has been sentences Skull." Then came the lectures to work a to death, his only defense being that the old man was too expensive. -- Exchange.
