He seized lowing days from one to six p.m. Maloney by the lapels of his coat and threw him on his back. Then the bartender took the revolver out of his pocket, and found it was not loaded. Maloney made a great fuss and wanted the revolver back and the bar-tender put him out of the hotel several times. When he got outside he said he would get the revolver and shoot every one in the hotel. Fearing that he might cause more trouble Dandy called for a policeman. Sergt. Nesbitt arrested Maloney. The prisoner carried the value and walked along quietly until he got to the market square. Then he refused to carry the valise, but he was overcome and went along quietly.

His name was registered as Edward J Maloney and Officer Burnett recognized him at once. In 1889 he tramped to Marysville, on the Bay of Quinte, and was engaged by a farmer there. He was hired on a Saturday. On Sunday the. farmer's son, a telegraph operator, had occasion to leave home, and while he was away Maloney robbed the young man's clothes, taking $40. Maloney jumped a train and came to Kingston. A repreentative of the Deseronto "Tribune" was in the telegraph office at Deseronte where he heard the message from Marysville that a robbery had been committed there and that $40 had been stolen. He had business in Kingston and happened to get on the same train as Maloney HAVE RECEIVED INSTRUCTIONS to sell the balance of W. M.
