THE GERMAN SCHOOLBOY.

No Other Student Studies So Hard or Knows So Little About Sport. Year after year gymnasiums, high schools and quiversities send out into the world, there to look for a living, multitudes of overwrought youths, teeming with instruction which has unfitted them for bread earning by the practice of any purely mechanical craft or petty trade, and has imbued them with many of the tastes and sempathies that can only be productive of happiness or even enjoyment to those who are enabled to take their stand and maintain it in one of the upper social spheres. These youths have been "put through the mill" with a severity of which the British public schoolboy and university "man"
