THE PANIC STRICKEN POPULACE.

A General Exodus From the Town-Scenes of Distress and Suffering Quarantine Raised Too Soon-A Recurrence of the Three months ago Brunswick, Ga., was a bright, beautiful, prosperous town of 15,000 inhabitants. Today its brightness is clouded; its beauty is blighted; its prosperity has departed. The city stands solitary and alone, cut off from the outside world. Itswharves are abandoned; its market places closed up; its streets deserted. The place is almost depopulated, and the few houses that are stilf tenanted are the habitations of wos and apprehension, for the black pall of a pestilence hangs over the town, and to the dark horror of the plague is add-The first of the calamities befalling the city was the failure of three banks and of several extensive business firms, which caused a financial panie. Hundreds of people were thrown out of employment. Then followed the yellow fever excitement, with vising the people to leave immediately agreeing to furnish the poor with passes News of the proclamation spread like wildfire throughout the city. The women were frantic, the men became excited, and there was a panic. The alarm was tremendous. The people who had been quietly attending to their office and other duties during the

Nearly everybody rushed madly for the depot, some leaving their loved ones behind. The one prevailing idea of that vast throng was to fly-whither they knew not, nor did they care so that they were out of the stricken city. Men, women and children were seen hurrying in every direction. Some were trying to get their sick wives or husbands to the depot. The whole town

At the depot the excitement was intense Fully 5,000 people were there to leave on the outgoing trains. Special trains, which had been ordered for the exodus of the refugees, were rapidly filled. Women and children were frantic. They climbed into the coaches through windows and were dren were scattered over the city, and some were left to take care of themselves. The the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia raffreads carried nearly 5,000 people out of the city that night. Many had left when

The situation in Branswick became extremely critical. The streets were deserted, business was abandoned, and only 600 whites and 2,000 negroes remained out-of a population of 15,000. The government took hold with a strong hand. Patients were isolated and properly treated, and a rigid quarantine was established. No person was allowed to leave Brunswick. This caused the poor people who had no work, money or provisions to soon feel the pangs of hunger. A call for help was sent out, and some fluancial assistance was received. A detention camp was established by the government under the charge of Surgeon G. M. Magruder. The camp was completed on about Sept. 6, and 300 tents, 1,000 mattresses and a supply of stores were stowed away in the buildings and left in charge of a carpenter

At this time there appeared to be no fever in Brunswick, and it was believed that the camp of detention would never be used by the government. The towns and cities began to raise quarantine against Brunswick. Probably 1,000 refugees returned home in

The government physicians did not approve of the influx of refugees, as they were of the opinion that there was danger until after frost. With the return of the refugees the situation in the stricken city became less gloomy. Business began to revive. Stores and shops were reopened here and there along the business streets. The people ventured to main on the streets until after sundown. The streets, while comparatively deserted, presented a lively appearance. The banks were cautious, but resumed business with an encouraging degree of confidence.

Fifteen days having elapsed since the announcement of the third case, the people of Brunswick began to think there was no more cause for alarm, and they demanded the raising of the government quarantine. The government physicians at first refused to order the quarantine raised. The people persisted in demanding that the quarantine be raised, and the government physicians with great hesitancy yielded to their

But the action was taken too soon. On Sept. 13 W. Killian died of yellow fever in Brunswick, and on the following day two caused great excitement in Brunswick.

At latest reports about 4,500 people were penned up in the stricken city, and 3,000 of them were suffering for food. A rigid quarantice is enforced, and communication with the outside world is conducted with. difficulty. Altogether the situation is a pitiful one, and all the help is needed that

Mrs. Howe's Beady Wit.

The celebrated Mrs. Julia Ward Howe of Boston has a keen and ready wit, which does not appear in her serious and earnest platform speeches. There is an old Boston story of Mrs. Howe which we venture to say has never got into print. Before the days of late dinners and afternoon teas, she was supping one evening with a certain Boston family-father, mother and daughter-who, according to general belief, had such rich blue blood in their veins that t could only circulate very slowly. They were so excessively refined, so Bostonese, BOCHESTER at 5 p.m., calling at Buth, Picthat the well springs of human sympathy were dried up within their bosoms. Breach of Promise.

A case which promises to be of consider-highness the sultan of Johore, otherwise known as Mr. Albert Baker, who visited the World's fair a few months ago. The damages are laid at a high figure, and the matter of a diamond buckle is also said to form a feature in the case. The sultan of Johore was elevated from the rank of maharajah to that of sultan some years ago in recognition of the firm, unwavering friendship which he had always given to the English name and rule, Among his many cultivated tastes he possesses a love for gardening. Somewhat above medium height, very dark in complexion; with a long, white mustache, he has always maintained his reputation as a dignified gentleman.

He usually dresses in English clothes of orthodox English cut and wears a black cloth cap, in the front of which flashes and scintillates a magnificent aigret of diamonds. Almost every finger is adorned with rings, two or more on each, of the same precious stones, but apart from this there is no trace of barbaric splendor about

He Looked Like a Murderer. A Washington physician told the following peculiar experience to a Star reporter: [7] "I had been up all night with a patient on whom I had performed a critical surgical operation. It was a question whether he would recover from the shock. In fact, it was touch and go, so that I could not take a minute's sleep. About 5 a. m. I got away and started for home, so exhausted that it never occurred to me to think of my ap-

"The horse car I boarded quickly filled up with laborers on their way to work. Though very sleepy, I was somewhat surprised to notice that several of them eyed me strangely. Those of them who sat down near me quickly moved away, and one man who took a seat next to me-I was in one of the front corners-looked at me, got up hastily, and held on to the strap. Nobody else took the vacant place, though the vehicle by that time was crowded.

"Not being used to being regarded as a pariah, I was considerably puzzled. I observed the faces of two or three men who sat opposite to me, and I thought that they gazed at me with an expression of horror and disgust. What could it mean? I began to feel alarmed "Just then I chanced to look down at one of my cuffs. It was saturated with blood. The other cuff I noticed for the first time was bloody also. My trousers were spotted with blood, and there were fresh stains of it on my coat sleeves. My anxiety, about the patient and subsequent exhaustion had prevented me from thinking of the matter, and I had not done more than wash my hands before starting for home. Unshaven as I was and wearing an old hat, I must have looked rather tough. Not a word was said as I got off

The latest innovation in the way of trolley transportation is in San Francisco where an electric hearse is in use on one of the railways leading from the city to four of the suburban cemeteries. The electric line parallels the tracks of the Southern Pacific railroad, and by cutting rates hopes to share the funeral traffic. Funeral processions meet the train at any point on the line. The coffin is placed in the electric bearse, and the pallbearers occupy a special compartment in the same car. The mourners are carried in an ordinary electric car. At the cemetery a hearse and carriages are in waiting, and the procession is reformed. The sable trappings of the electric bearse give it a mournful and minently respectable appearance, and the idea of electric funerals does not seem to shock the sensibilities of the San Francis-
