

WITH A GRAIN OF SALT

Must be taken the exaggerated and reckless statements of many of our fellow merchants, but in listening to us

YOU CAN MAKE

No mistake, because our goods surpass any statement we can make. Sometimes in telling

A STORY

It is difficult to find words, as they seem incapable of doing justice to the subject. Mere talk is too

THIN.

Our stock is acknowledged to be one of the best assortments in Central Ontario. We claim for our goods the best quality, workmanship and style in Kingston. Our prices you will find are 25 per cent. lower than any in the city. We have a number of Boys Suits left which will be cleared out at Cost. We are anxious to make room for Spring stock. These suits are cheap. It is a chance you don't get very often. This holds good until MARCH 1st. Remember before buying to call on the

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

THE LONDON ELECTION CASE BEFORE THE HOUSE.

An important discussion in which Hon. David Mills and Mr. John Thompson participated—Mr. Corkhouse and the Hales de Chaleurs Employes.

OTTAWA, March 4.—After the holiday and the influx of the press visitors and the departure of the governors of the House were well under way.

Mr. Lester was in his place, looking as regal as his old-time health.

In answer to Sir Richard Sebright, Hon. John Hagger said the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway were from July 1, 1870, to Feb. 1, 1871, $1,750,000, and the expense same time $2,404,635, loss $643,945. From July 1, 1870, to Feb. 1, 1871, $1,811,000, working expenses, $2,182,151; losses, $271,162. This shows that the losses for the latter six months were higher than for the corresponding preceding six months.

Mr. Hagger said it would take a long time to make up a return asked for by Mr. McMillan of the employees in the Government railway service. There were 4735 regular employees and over 600 temporary ones. The matter was adjourned.

State de Chaleurs Employees.

Mr. Corkhouse brought up the motion that a committee be appointed to take evidence under oath, and report upon claims regarding spill unpaid of the men, laborers of the workmen, and those who supplied board to the workmen and the contractors, in connection with the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

He began his address by saying that his action was prompted, not by party feeling, but by the duty he owed to the Bank of Ontario, of which he was a director, and to the interest of the public.

He related the story of the poor laborers and how anxious Mr. Mercer had been to see these wages paid and had kept the money therefrom for the money coming to the contractor. A year ago, when he began investigating the case, Mr. Mercer had no open season for information that he could not wait until now. He then told of the evidence elicited the other day, that in 1870 a check for $28,540 was issued by the Quebec Government for the payment of these claims. The check was issued to Mr. Langlois, who was then in the employ of the contractor. A man, Mr. Mercer, had it taken to Langlois, who gave him a sum of $17,500 to Langelier to take care of the claims. The contractor was not entitled to all of these sums, but the payment was largely if not entirely in big offices and in many of the small ones throughout the country. It marks a change to which public attention has been drawn.

The present year would be memorable for the exciting issues from the introduction into the large newspaper offices at Toronto and elsewhere of typewriting machines. The full effect of these wonderful labor-saving machines is yet to be seen. They would probably increase the profits of publishers for a time, erate some disturbance in the ranks, but the result would be a more rapid and general diffusion of knowledge. The speaker claimed that the growth of sympathy for the cause of labor has been remarkable. The speaker claimed that not a little of this new and improved spirit was due to the influence of the members of the C.P.R. The present year would be memorable for the coming to the death of Col. Wyllie of Brockville, who was long the Nestor of the Canadian press. Mr. Patullo suggested that it printed protocol that the association should pay for a record of their fallen comrade in a more appropriate manner than the usual obituary notice.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.

Mr. Ross followed with a lengthy address. He fully vindicated the cause of higher education and demonstrated conclusively that the establishment of a national university was not out of proportion to its importance.