A wound and dishonor shall be get and his spreach shall not be wheel away. For jealousy is the ragues a man, therefore he will not spare is, the day of vengeance.—Proverts vt. 35, 54. So said the wise king 3,000 years ago, and the social history of all nations since has been a continuous filustration of its truth. The philosophy of the matter is plain. The two motors of hunian progress are hunger and love; the former is the germ of all material developments, the latter of all moral. It is therefore an imperative necessity that while that appetite on which

MRS. DESSIE HEWES HETHERINGTON at any time, should you deem it figreest, that on which race life depends should be the most jealous and relentless and the law of evolution insures that those seoples in whom it is so are the ones that curvive. It is therefore easy to see why this jealous rage has bloody results among all progressive peoples. The cases of Deacon and Lieutenant letherington abound in startling contrast of wealth and fashion with folly, rime and misery. On Dec. 10, 1889, a brilant and fashionable assembly filled Trinty Episcopal church in Wilmington, Del. special choir of thirty-five voices sung the marriage music while a remarkably ity, and all the train of evils from early | handsome pair moved to the altar-he restrength, development, and tone given | cloud of delicate fabrics, which stirred the to do their best in the daily papers. The bride was Bessie Hewes, daughter of a wealthy citizen, belie in the most fashionable set and a famous beauty; the groom was Lieutenant. James H. Hetherington, J. S. ish banker and bond broker, handsome talented and popular-"the life of the foreign colony in Yokohama"-was driving along the water front with a friend when Lieutenant Hetherington suddenly ap peared and raised his hand for them to stop. They did so. Three loud reports, aree balls from a heavy navy revolver, one wounded the friend slightly, another grazed Robinson, the third inflicted a mortal wound. He died in five hours. It is not necessary to detail the interme diate steps. All the men of the foreign colony say, "A good fellow and a perfect gentleman killed for the foolishness of a abitual constitution. very foolish woman. Having for many years done, nothing to retain his wife's affections, he asserted his rightswith a pistol. There is a question yet to he settled in such cases: Has the long negigent husband any such extreme rights? The most noted case in American annals, probably, was that in which Philip Barton Key lost his life. All the parties to this tragedy were of national prominence—the player a member of congress, and since a prominent general and politician; the slain, Inited States attorney for the District of Columbia and scion of one of the oldest and prost noted families in America, while the attorneys and witnesses were scarcely cheap for cash. So she is a mother In new countries jealous husbands are elentless, while as communities grow older and presumably more refined, such cases are generally left to the law. Therefrom one, class of philosophers argue that killing insuch cases is simply a survival of ancient barbarism. The old argument, the Asiatic Complete Set 100 pieces. $7 argument today, runs like this: "My property I will defend, by bloodshed if necessary; and my wife is my property. Let her alone or I will kill you. So far as I can learn but one common wealth has ever put this sentiment into statute law, and that-with amazement, be it noted-is Utah territory. Very early in the days of Mormon legislation they passed a statute which, by the construction of their courts, meant this, "If any man so duces a woman he must die and her nearest relative must kill bim!" And the law was often enforced-against Gentiles and 'Apostates." In the case of "good Mormons" the elders managed to "fix it up." connection with the building of the monument now being erected in memory of the late Chief of Police Hennessey, of New Orleans, is that seven of the nine men employed in its construction are Italians. Speaking of that, Joseph Archi, who has charge of the work, said, "The Italians who are doing this work are of a different class altogether from the New Orleans Italians who killed Hennessey, and they are in perfect sympet w with the Americans who shot our a minded countrymen." The monument has three bases, the name "Hennessey" is chiseled in raised CHEAP etters. The capital is two feet in height, with paneled sides. Surmounting the capital is a plain granite column thirteen feet in height. At the foot of the column is the coat of arms of Lauisians, and above that is a representation of the dead chief's badge. From the draped top of the column are suspended a policeman's belt and a club like those worn by the dead chief.

But scarcely less interesting are the private details. Mr. Pepys was evidently very careful about his dress and very proud of a new suit. "Up early," he says, on the 13th of the month, "the first day that I put on my black camlett cloak with silver buttons." Sometimes we are carried to a christening. To one of these he tells us how he carried, in his pocket six silver spoons and a silver porringer, expecting that the child would be named after him. But the parents named the boy John, instead of Samuel; so careful Mr. Pepys carried the spoons and porringer home again.

A Doe and Her Fawn. The following pretty tale of the woods is told in Golden Days: "While two men were riding along a creek in California they saw some distance ahead a doe and her fawn drinking from the stream. The bank was very steep and the water quite deep at this point. When the deer saw the hunters they were startled, and in attempting to turn the little fawn, lost its balance and fell into the creek. The water runs very swiftly in this creek, and of course the fawn was carried down stream, and the mother deer, apparently losing all fear of | beare & Howson. the human spectators, ran along the bank, trying to reach her offspring with her head. Failing in this she ran forward for some little distance, plunged in, braced her feet in the crevices of the rocks and waited. Presently the fawn was washed against her and instinctively clasped her neck with its forelegs, and the doe carefully regained the bank. There she lay the doe licked and fondled the fawn until it rose to its feet, and then the two animals trotted off into the adjoining woods."
