ST JACOBS OIL
TRADE MARK
THE GREAT REMEDY FOR PAIN

Rheumatism.

Rheumatism is defined to be a painful inflammation affecting the muscles and joints of the human body, chiefly the larger joints, as the hips, knees, shoulders, &c. It is of two kinds or stages: Subacute and Chronic. St. Jacobs Oil

CURES CHRONIC CASES OF 40 YEARS.

Symptoms.—The disease is the same—outside of inflammatory—through the former stage it is of a slower, more obstinate character. It is distinguished by soreness and stiffness of the muscles, and the misery is more in the nature of an ache than an acute pain.

NO RELAPSE AFTER CURE.

Treatment.—Rub the parts freely with St. Jacobs Oil, rub hard and vigorously, producing warmth, and if the pain is slow in yielding wrap the parts in flannel steeped in hot water and wring out.

NO RETURN OF PAIN. A FACT ESTABLISHED BY RENEWALS OF TESTIMONY WHEREIN IT IS SHOWN.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

The Thirteen Club of New York Their Sworn Foe.

UNLUCKY DAYS AND NUMBERS.

Distinguished People Who Are Banded Together in Defiance of Generally Accepted Beliefs as to the Mysterious Origin of Human Misfortunes.

N FRIDAY evening, Jan. 15, 1882, at thirteen minutes after 8 o'clock, in room 13 of Knickerbocker cottage, 454 Sixth avenue, New York, one of the old time hostelries of the metropolis, thirteen gentlemen sat down to dinner, and then and there organized a club having for its object the uprooting of the ancient superstition that the day and the number 13 are fraught with evil. Curiously, in the name of the host and founder of the club, William Fowler, are thirteen letters; there are thirteen letters in the name "Knickerbocker;" the numbers 454 make thirteen, and they also comprise the number of letters in "city of New York." The dinner consisted of thirteen courses, and each man drank out of thirteen bottles of wine. Of the original members eleven are alive, and two did not die until six years afterward. It is worthy of note, however, that at this first feast it was necessary to lock the doors in order to sustain the courage of the party.

They were called cranks, iconoclasts and Don Quixotes fighting imaginary windmills and other uncomplimentary names, but the club grew from thirteen members in January, 1882, until it reached a membership of thirteen times thirteen in 1885, twenty-six times thirteen in 1886, and 100 times thirteen, the limit decided upon, in 1889. It now numbers upon its roll some of the most distinguished men in the country, including President Harrison, ex-President Grover Cleveland, the late ex-President Chester A. Arthur, governors of states, United States senators, chief justices, statesmen, clergymen, editors and hundreds of other men of high and low degree. The initiation fee is 113 cents, the nominal dues thirteen cents a month, and the dinners, always held on the 13th of the month, bring together as merry a lot of philosophers and story tellers as ever made right angles with their legs "under the mahogany" and kept people around them in a state of interesting agitation.

In truth, it may be rightly designated an anticalamity croaker society, the object of which is to make a man ashamed to acknowledge that he cannot rise superior to the ordinary superstitions of the age. And yet there is an exception to every rule. The story is told even of Captain Fowler, the founder of the Thirteen club, that on the occasion of one of the dinners, seeing a ladder which some practical joker had suspended over the entrance to the banquet room, he quietly excused himself from the leadership of the procession of guests about to pass under it, and as fast as he could take his ponderous 340 pounds of avoirdupois moved around and entered by another door. The ladder was too much for him.

The first mention of the number thirteen in the Bible occurs in Genesis xiv, 4. "Twelve years they served Chedorlaomer, and in the thirteenth year they rebelled." From that time down to this it is claimed that the number has dominated all the historical eras in which wars have occurred. There were thirteen tribes of Israel. Thirteen tribes went with Moses into the wilderness. Thirteen disciples sat at the last supper of Christ. There were thirteen colonies and original states in our republic, thirteen articles of confederation, and thirteen years elapsed between independence and the adoption of the constitution. Our national banner held thirteen stripes and thirteen stars. The motto "E Pluribus Unum" contains thirteen letters, and upon the great seal of the United States thirteen letters are found in the legend, "Annuit Coeptis," meaning "He prospers our beginning."

Not long ago a writer in the New York Tribune, after describing the loss by collision of Pilot boat 11, concluded in these words: "The career of the men who owned the boat has been an unlucky one. They owned the original Pilot boat No. 11, which designation contains just thirteen letters. They had followed the profession just thirteen years when their first boat was lost. Then they built another No. 11 and named her The Phantom. This boat was lost in the great blizzard (thirteen letters) of March 12, 1888. Then they built the A. E. Bateman, or, as she is registered, 'Pilot-boat No. 11.' In just thirteen months from the time her predecessor was lost she was run down and sunk by the steamer Servia (thirteen letters). There were on board at the time twelve persons and a cat, or thirteen in all, and the loss was about $13,000."

EMBLEM OF THE THIRTEEN CLUB.

Thus, ridicule it as we may, superstition confronts us in one form or another as an everyday experience. It seems to be one of the ineradicable attributes of human nature. Those who are not habituated to reflection often retain undiminished until their dying hour a belief in signs and omens which they were taught in childhood. The firebalis usually known by the names of "Jack-o'-lantern" or "Will-o'-the-wisp," that are sometimes seen dancing over marshy places in the country, are only an inflammable gas coming from the ground and set on fire by spontaneous combustion, yet they have produced great terror and often serious injury.

Many a man has fled as though demons were in pursuit of him because he has seen in some rotten stump the bright light which decayed wood emits, phosphorus being present. A man who is thoroughly frightened can imagine almost anything. The whistling of the wind sounds in his ears like the cry of dying men; a waving tree is a ghost; a guidepost in the dark is like a giant, and every cow he chances to meet is an apparition from the land of hobgoblins. A person thus terrified is always sure to exaggerate.

A sailor will climb to the topmast's dizzy height and be fearless in the midst of a storm, yet will tremble in his hammock when he hears the little insect called the deathwatch ticking in the timber by his side. A soldier will go bravely through the bloodiest battle and yet in the night after the conflict be afraid to go among the bodies of the powerless dead. A former chief justice of New York once said, "I have no faith in signs and still I always feel unpleasantly if I find a pin with the point toward me." A well known author in New York never fails to pick up a pin or a nail. It "brings him," he says, good luck. Some people cannot see the new moon over the left shoulder or through the branches of trees without an uneasy sensation. To others the spilling of salt, the fall of a looking glass, the howl of a dog, a rabbit running across a path or the hooting of an owl are signs of coming trouble.

A few superstitions common among women are these: You must on no account sing before breakfast, or you will weep before supper. If, however, you are so careless as to forget yourself to the extent of humming a bar or two, you must quickly pronounce the mysterious formula, "Bread and butter," which will immediately exorcise any evil spirits that are lurking about. Should you stumble against a loose plank or over a stone upon the street, turn back, and with great presence of mind step over the stumbling block, or bad luck will follow you throughout the day. In dressing yourself, if by chance you should put on a garment wrong side out, turn it on no account, or confusion worse than death will come upon you.

Among our superstitious ancestors certain precious stones were supposed to possess a special influence over each month. They therefore wore the sapphire in September, the emerald in May, and so forth. They even appropriated to twelve kinds of stones the twelve signs of the zodiac and the twelve apostles.

Superstition is observable even in the matter of rings, especially those for children. Most mothers object to pearls, it being a common belief that they mean tears. Sometimes the mother has the first tooth that the baby has lost set in gold. The garnet is supposed to represent January; amethysts, February; bloodstones, March; diamonds, April; emeralds, May; pearls, June; rubies, July; moonstones, August; sapphires, September; opals, October; topazes, November; turquoises, December. These are the months in which the stones are believed to bring luck to the wearer.

A race course is usually full of superstitious persons of both sexes. Few betting people have the courage to wager their money after having seen a cross eyed individual. Personal contact with a hunchback brings good luck. Women have been seen to leave the grand stand and rush down for the purpose of touching the hump on a dwarf's back. Even the late Augustus Belmont is said to have been so superstitious that he employed a clever young hunchback to place his commissions in the betting ring. The man who having bet det ets himself singing before a race is doomed to lose. His only safeguard is hedging.

The appearance of a white horse never fails to cause anxious search for the red haired girl, and the combination is regarded as invincible. Money carried for three days in a man's shoe or a woman's stocking is invested with absolute confidence in its winning powers. Some men never back a horse except at odds of six to five or nine to five. They assert that they always win at those prices and lose at others. Racegoers have also lucky days. Some win on Tuesday, some on Thursday, some on Saturday. The majority lose every day.

A notable result that has followed the organization of the Thirteen club has been a change in several states of the day of execution from Friday to some other day of the week. One judge has written that he never again would sentence a man to be executed on a Friday, because he "would not insult the memory of the Founder of Christianity by sentencing a murderer to be hanged on the day upon which the Son of God sacrificed his life for humanity's sake."

There may be much good in the purpose of the club, but since the days of the Witch of Endor superstitions have prevailed, and they are likely to continue in spite of the most conscientious missionary work as long as men subordinate their minds to the follies of the imagination.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.

With the changing season it is prudent for all to rectify any ailments afflicting them; but it is incumbent on the aged, suffering under ulcerations and similar debilitating causes, to have them removed or worse consequences will follow. This Ointment is their remedy; on its powers all may confidently rely; it not simply puts their sores out of sight, but extirpates the source of mischief, extracts the corroding poison, and stimulates nature to fill up the ulcer with sound, healthy granulations, that will abide through life. Under this treatment bad legs soon become sound, scorbutic skins cast off their scales, and scrofulous sores cease to annoy. Such hope for the disease was unknown in former days.

A Real Suicide Club.

Robert Louis Stevenson's weird story, "Modern Arabian Nights," has been discounted by recent developments at the military school in Krajova, Roumania. Nineteen cadets, scions of the proudest Roumanian families, entered into a compact requiring any one whose name might be drawn to commit suicide. It was intended as a joke by the young man who suggested it; but when at the first drawing the unfortunate youth whose name came out drew a pistol instantly, and, placing it against his temple, blew his brains out, it became a most serious matter. The others then felt bound by the letter of the compact, and five of them had perished by their own hands when the similarity of the deaths caused the authorities to investigate, with the result that the fourteen surviving members have been locked up charged with having aided and abetted "unjustifiable suicide."
