No more magnificent temple could be con ceived for such a ceremony than St. Patrick's esthedral on the Fifth avenue, which, by the way, stands on one of the most elevated spots on the island of Manhattan. It is of white marble, with two stately towers shooting upward to the beavens three hundred and thirty six feet. It is so beautifully proportioned that you can easily realize its sixe, and five thousand people can scarcely find oom within its consegrated walls. The nagnifice at interior, los feet high, a vision architectual beauty, was splendidly deorated, and illuminated by the dessling light of its matchless windows presented a score never to be forgotten. When the archbishop entered, the grand organ broke in a strain of triumph and welcome that made the vast building tremble from turret to oundation stone. Above the mighty swell the organ rose the sweet voices of the boy chair, flooding the fast building with one great, grand wave of harmony. The mmense congregation rose as it by inspiration, all of the surroundings making it s scene, never to be forgotten. Bishop M. Donnell is yet a very young man.
