May Day. One day, all in the sweet spring weather,

Two little maids went out together-Oh, the bright May day! Sun was shining, birds were singing Flowers blooming, May bells ringing Oh, the glad May day!

So they too went forth a-Maying Laughing, dancing, singing, saying-Oh, the bright May day! What care we for mother's warning? Who would bide at home this morning Oh, the glad May day!

Mother peeps from the lattice crying, Wise birds back to their nests are flying-Oh, the fickle May! Silly maidens, where do yo wander? Storm clouds gather thickly yonder!

Oh, the false May day! Hark, the rain comes patter, patter! Garlands gay the wild winds scatter-Oh, the fickle May! Now the maidens, helter skelter, Hasten back to mother's sheller

From the false May day! Mother's love can never leave us-Oh, no more we'll stray! Home for maidens is the meeters Brightest, enfest, dearest, sweetest; So at home we'll stay!

But, like the wise politician, she said nothing and sawed wood, or rather shaved faces. Her manner was so quiet and unobtrusive that she speedily made friends, and those who at first went to her to be shaved as a matter of curiosity now patronize her because they have ascertained that she is a good barber and, unlike most persons who wield. the shears and razor, never engages in conversation with a customer.

Nannie is a small woman of neat-appearance, and is said to be the only colored female barber in that portion of New England. She speaks French fluently, and is determined to perfect herself as a violin player, and as she was for some time a school teacher it will be seen that she is a young woman of more than ordinary at for treatise, J.
