lobuson, Deminion statistician, says: The ultimate analysis of all these figures shows: I. That there has been a large merease in the number of hands employed, a large in-crease in the wages paid and that the largest increase is in the capital invested. The increase in the capital culisted points George A. McDonald to a shallow pool and to a large outlay for improved machiners. ters signed Murray, accusing certain per left him. In fact the great feature of the decade's industrial progress is the vantly improved state of manufac turing machinery, on account of which I Canada is much better fitted to meet outside rivalry than she was 10 years ago. 2. That the average workman in 1891 is a more skilled hand than he was in 1881, masmuch as he turned out 6 per cent. more of finished products (judged by value) than 3. That the average werkman in 1891 earned 16 per cent. more wages than he did

4. That as every dollar invested produced in 1891 less than in 1881, the capitalist has had to be content with a smaller 5. That, notwithstanding the reducti in the gross profits of the manufacturer the workman has received a larger share of total value of the products by 9 per cent. 6 That the cost of raw material was on the whole higher in 1891 than ISSI, though POLSON & CO. this may be apparent rather than real, the point. It might thus be that in some cases in 1881 the first cost without the added cost of transportation and customs duties 7. The facts of the census appear to substarmete the general proposition which expresses the experience of all progressive and prosperous countries, viz -that in proportion to the application of science, invention and skilled labor to the arts of production the owner of the capital is diminished in ratio to the joint product, but the share falling to the skilled workmen is augmented, both absolutely and also relatively to the joint OTTAWA, June 23. Patent Act and riminal code from 11 o'clock to 1; erimin

While the oriminal law was under dis cussion this morning Mr. Curran, at the suggestion of the Montreal society for the protection of women and children, moved a couple of amend menta to the clauses relating to young girls, from 14 to 16, and the second that the clause referring to harboring be changed so that no girls under 21 years of age can be harbored in houses of ill-fame. Both amendments were lost. Sir Richard Cartwright gives notice to night of an amendment to the Ontario clause of the Resistribution Bill which is to the effect that the whole clause be struck out and the electoral districts of Frontenac and Lennux be united and return one member, and the district of South Grenville and North Logds and Grenville united so as to make one electoral district and so provide
