We all admire the brave six hundred men described by Tennyson as dashing into the conflict where they knew they that "some one had blunder'd," but we are abhorrent of the man who made the blunder and who caused the sacrifice of those brave men for no use. the Old World. Madame Salazare is the only modern Italian woman whose name is really well known in the advanced circles of Paris and London. Although she is a young woman, she has done much to ameliorate the condition of her fellow-country-women, and Signor Crispi holds her in the greatest esteem and respect. A Florentine by birth, she is full of the fire and ardor of her race, and her earnest pleading has won the cause dear to her partisans in every carsp. The dream of Mme. Salazaro's life is to found a university where the two sexes onn study together without let or hindrance. She visited Girton and Newnham, Oxford and Cambridge about two years ago in order to gather ideas to her scheme, and was warmly received by Miss Helen Gladstone and the late Miss Clough. On her return to Italy she asked and obtained an audience of Queen Marguerita and unfolded her views. Since then her proposed reforms and de-tection of abuses in the existing laws affecting Italian women have been favorably received at the Quirinal, and the plucky champion of women's rights has found her path less in consequence.

Mrs. Garrett Fawcett is not the mother of the only girl senior wrangler in the world, she is also one of the best platform speakers in England, and the most logical talker among political economists of our day. She still recalls to many of her friends the slight, golden-haired Millie Garrett who married Harry Fawcett, the brilliant Oxford scholar, who was blinded accidentally by his own father while the two were It was a touching sight, that of the tall, powerful, helpless man being led about by his wife. As a reward for his services to the Liberal party, the blind member of Parliament was made Postmaster-General, and Mrs. Fawcett acted as private secretary and was eminently successful. With the aid of her son, Lord Robert Cecil, Lady Salisbury drew all the plans of the stately chateau which will be in future her French home. It can only be account ed for by the fact that when they were children their parents were close friends and that from the time Margaret was five years old Daniel had been taught to call her "my little wife." Mme. Wilson is preparing a life of her father, which she hopes will clear him before the eyes of his countrymen, and prove him to have been a good, upright magistrate. To her and her husband the enormous Grevy fortune was left unconditionally, and they now inhabit the beautiful house which the President is said to have built out of his savings. Mme. The "moving stone of South America," one of the most remarkable of the many curious geological formations known to scientists, is located on the Tandil Mountains, in the southern part of the Republic of Buenos Ayres.
