WHAT MAY HAPPEN. by Mr. Gladstone does not carry through old, dried-up man with a purple wen on his to the people. That is not Justin Moon, Mr. McCorthy says :

"Mr. Gladatone lost office for the sake of home rule, he regained office because of home rule and he knows that the people of Ireland and the vast Irish population of the United States and Canada and Australia, look to him to inaugurate his return to power by introducing a measure for the setting up of home rule in Ireland. I take it for granted that this is what he will do. On that point I cannot admit into my own mind any man-ner of doubt. But there is not the alightest reason why, when his ministry gets to actual work, heahould not himself introduce a home rule scheme on one day, and others of his colleagues introduce a one man, one vote bill and a reformed registration bill the same day or the day after. The bills could then follow in each other's steps sasily enough, and if Mr. Gladstone should not be able to force als home rule bill through the house of lords on the very first rush, he might easily secure the passing of the other measures, which would make home rule, at the certainty and of easy encoses. There is another way of doing the work. Mr. Gladetone may bring in a home rule bill in the first session of the new parliament. He has majority enough—quite enough—to carry his bill through the house of commons. It goes up to the lords, and the lords, as I have said, reject it. Then Mr. Gladstone should call another session very early, and bring in the home rule bill again; and meantime the country would be roused to such an agitation against the house of 'ords that the poers would feel they must either give in or give out. The peers would feel-must know—that if they carry resistance any farther there would be an uprising of public opinion before which the house of lords would go down like an Alpine village before an avalanche." The scheme, thus sketched, is probably the one the government will follow. It is likely to be the one contemplated, else Mr. McCarthy would not cutling it so carefully and embody it in his forecast. The idea is to involve the lords in a struggle which may
