London last year. I well remember the great unbelief of my own heart before the meeting of the Edinburgh council, and the torment felt as the fear arose that possibly the meeting of so many delegates, representing diverse races, languages and countries, with liverse views and methods, and possibly ifferences too among themselves, might prove an occasion of painful collision istead of brotherly harmony. But it was slightful, when the Edinburgh meeting etually took place, to find the various eleents coalescing with perfect readiness inder the influence of a common faith, a influence of this, which could not fail to be apprehended by the community, was a stumony to the unity of the Church of Christ, as impressive as it was fresh and novel. But what I would mainly gather from the Methodist and Congregational experience is that we Presbyterians took a right view both of our duty and our. privilege when nearly 20 years ago we began to move for a world-wide Presbyterian siliance; that we rightly interpreted one of the purposes in Providence of that unprecedented facility of travel which our age supplies, when we used it to bring brethren together from far distances; that we were

Others said it would serve merely as a trumpet to proclaim the glory of Presbyterianism-it would make bigots us all. No doubt there has been talk; but read the volumes of our proceedings, and you will see it has neither been idle nor empty talk. No doubt our alliance has made known more widely the scriptural basis, the aids extension and the wholesome influence the Presbyterian church; but if it has made us more Presbyterian, it has made us more catholic, too. It has enlarged our perizon; it has elevated our point of view; t has taught us to embrace in our survey the wide, wide world; to think of the vast work that has yet to be done by the Christian church before, like a sea of glory, it spreads from pole to pole. It has led us, I am persuaded, to a more brotherly and sympathetic view of all who are bearing an efficient part in this great work of union in the We may say that the more you have of
