THR STREET RAILWAY. The conclusion reached by the counc'l, as a result of the discussion on Wednesday evening, and of the representations of the streets committee, is (1) that the Kingston street railway company will be required to lay down a track, and operate cars thereon, on streets not now-occupied by the railway; and (2) that if the request is not obeyed in six months the council will be at liberty to deal with outside parties. Is this the spirit of plause 33 of the agreement entered into between the city council and the Kingston treet railway on April 16th, 1877 ? What says the clause? In the event of any other mpany or party proposing to construct and operate the railway on eny of the exceeds, or parts the streets of the city, not now allowed to be occupied by the street railway, and the council favoring the scheme, the Kingston street railway company shall be notified. and if they are willing to act on it within six months the privilege shall be granted to them, otherwise the council may grant it to whom they please, on the same or different terms. This is the paragraph freed of legal phraseology. And some read that before Mr. Folger can be asked to build any more railways the proposal in regard to it must come from another party, and the more one looks at the agreement the more reasonable this argument appears. What does the city solictor say? Does he take that meaning out of the agreement? There is some force in seeking a settlement of the nestion at once since six months have to transpire before the street railway company can be compelled to decide what it will do, and six mouths from a proper starting

A TERRIBLE TAX. The conservative press has not got done discussing the grandness of the Petroles demonetration. It was a great event, estensibly projected in order to show the feryour of the local politicians and their admiration of members of the government, but really to exhibit the monopolistic tendencies of the oil men. The coal oil con sumers have no reason to pet the l'etrolea magnates, and, under provocation on assum: ed defence of the high tariff. CHOLERA AND CLEANLINESS. The October number of the Ret'es Reviews contains an interesting article or the places which have been thoroughly cleansed and kept clean through perfect sanitary arrangements. Read this :

"Every one has heard the atory of the delivish who met the cholera on the desert and asked where it was bound. 'To Damascus to slay 20,000 men.' Meeting it again on returning, the dervish said: 'You rascal, you killed 100,000 l' 'No,' said the cholera, 'I killed only 20,000—fear killed of the rest,' That panic fear, however, is ed the rest. That panie fear, however, is deadly to-day, because it stirs up the cani-tr y inspectors, flushes the drains and incure expenditure which, save on compulsion of holders, would never be sanctioned by parsimonious sanitary boards. M. Lessar, the brilliant Russian diplomatist and engineer, who for some time past has been the resident at Bokhars, told Mr. Stead the mon in the Methodist church on Sunday.

The months to her mother in the mother in the mother in the mother and the two women who, one at the beginning of his life and the other at its ending, will prove his best, his truest, his most loving friends—his mother and his resident at Bokhars, told Mr. Stead the mon in the Methodist church on Sunday.

The mother in the moral detributed of her sex is a he and a reflection upon the two women who, one at the beginning of his life and the life and the beginning of his life and the beginning of his life and the life and life and the life and t other day that his ameer had averted the His sermon pleased the large congregation. tation of cholers by a vigorous sani-g reform which has made Bok-come him back to his old circuit. in the most unlikely quarters. Unforters. tely we have no equivalent to a lenged-for orly to St. Petersburg with which to bribe our local among into a display of sanitary activity. Nothing will do that short of the udden and sensational slaughter of a certain number of taxpayers; and as this human merciful arrangement that the work should be intrusted to a disease as rapid and dec-

ill three days, there is at least no prolonged torture before death." Is must have been remarked with what little alarm the cholera's march was viewed in England. Why? The sanitary measures were efficient and they were applied to time of danger with remorseless vigor. A few cases of the disease appeared in London, and went from there to the provincial cities, but they were quickly seized upon and treat. ed on scientific principles, and the threatened spidemic was effectually stamped out.

The learned men have been siming bring peace and tranquility to the masses by assuring them that cholera is not contagious, that it is a disease which find its origin in the cating of food and drinking of water which have been contaminated, that there is stomach. But it is more assuring to know that greater security rests with the people whose purity is above the common, whose

What Kingston wants and must have in the near future is some system by which the garbage can be collected weekly and carted away beyond the city limits and buried or burned. It is criminal folly to conclude that with the advance of frost the danger of onolera is past. Spring will come and perhaps with it the spidemic, and spring in Kingston has, generally, been the most rnhealthy period of the year. Why? Because the garbage of months has been allowed to accumulate, giving no offence during the cold weather but temitting a foulness under the warming heat of the sun which cannot fail to affect the public health. The time for experiment has come. Better by far that the council comomise in some other direction than wait to guard against an acsumulation of filth in the yards and cellars of the city during the aucceeding winter Let it be carted away, and the people can rest content and with good reason.

Notwithstanding the gloomy looking weather a few days previous and the rain that fell, the track was in a good condition.

The display in the hall of fancy work was never before surpassed. There was also a good display of grain and roots.

The display of horses was fine and the races as usual attractive, were hotly con tested. The first day races were :

The great value of thoroughness is understood and appreciated by just about one or two young men out of every ten in business no danger of death except through it a life to day. The tendency with the average young man is to "rush" things to get a It is the end he seeks, forgetting that some people are apt to examine into the means surroundings are free of every foul smell by which some ends are attained. It is not at all surprising to me why some young men do not succeed in business when I see the methods they adopt to attain success. They want to succeed, but they do not want to do the work necessary for success. They want large salaries, good positions, that little they will not do well. If there are two Amercanisms that have wrought more evil than any other, I think it is the one of, "Oh, it is good enough!" and the other of "It will do," when a thing is about to-day; to do it well and thoroughly rarely enters into their heads. The office boy believes he will commend himself to his employer by "copying" twenty letters in five minutes in the "letter press," but the accomplishment of speed is far clearer to that boy's mind than are the impressions of the letters in the book to the employer some days after. The young man who clerks prides himself upon his ability to answer all the morning's mail before the noon hour of each day. He does it, but how? Ab breviations are as plentiful as words in that clerk's letters, until, as a possible record, the communication is utterly valueless, minus, as it frequently is, of either date, or name of addressee. I have absolutely no patience with that haste, unfortunately so common in business, which omits the "Mr." or "Esquire" and a business letter, the year from a date line, which brings "Gentlemen" to "Gent'n" or "Dear Sir," to "Dr Sir," "Yours Respectfully," to "Y'rs Resp'y," or offends good taste by the hasty abbreviations of such a name as "Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes," on the envelope of a letter to "O. W. Holmes," of "George William Curtis, Esquire," to "G. W. Curtis," or the proper prescription of "Philadelphia. Penn'a," to 'Phil'a, Pa." And yet these are the ideas of "rushing" business which prevails in the minds of scores of young men. Rapid work is never creditable where it is but half done. Far more apt is it to act just the reverse than the worker imagines; and the young man whose only recommendation is that he is able to get through with "a pile of work, by the methods I have outlined, has in him the making of a very poor business man The successful business man are most care ful about small things, and they often look for the smaller traits in their clerks in form ing opinions of their characters. Not that I would wish any young man small things that he has no energy or cor prehension of the larger ones. The bu ness world of to-day has no room for plod ders, nor for men of small minds. The best success is that obtained on broad principles by men capable of sweeping the entire horigon with one glance. But thoroughness applies to the largest enterprises as well as to the smallest routine detail of office work. Slip-shod methods are never iden tified with success; patience, perseverance and thoroughness are the levers of business progress. "Rushing" a thing never pays. We regard men of quick or early successer sometimes, and say that "he rushed into success," when the fact is, that no man ever rushed into a success that is a success. Rehind every successful career is always found work, and hard work, work born of accuracy and thoroughness. However much to the public the successful man may sometimes seem to have been made in a day, there is always a story to every success. To one story there may be more chapters than to another, but the story as a whole is always the same, and two chapters one is pretty apt to find in the book of every successful life are headed "Honesty" and

Who Are Brothers in-Law Rev. R. W. Rayson answers, in the Montreal Star, the true reason why the husbands of two sisters should be regarded as brothersn law ? "The relationship," he writes, does not rest on any connection with the parents of the sisters, but on the relation to the sisters themselves. A man and his wife ere 'one flesh,' hence his wife's relations are marrying two brothers in succession, or a man marrying two sisters in succession. Since, then, the husband of a woman's sleter is, undoubtedly, that woman's brother inlaw, he must, by parity of reasoning, be her husband's brother in law also. It might, undoubtedly, be more pleasant in some cases to ignore it, but it is a true relation-
