In some cases these families, having inherited the presentation of a living, have, very naturally, brought up one of their members in holy orders to keep the benefice in the fam. | give satisfaction. ily. In others, doubtless, a strong theological bias has almost forced its members to enter the church; and it has even been suggested that these clerical families have inherited from the ancesters sermons, and thus having a good stock of these essentials, have chosen the preaching career merely to utilize their heirlooms, One of the oldest of the clerical families is the Collins family, of Cornwall. This was founded at the Reformation by one of | Cliften's Good Overcoats from the earliest of the married priests, a certain Edward Coilins, who was instituted rector of Illegan in 1533. He and his descendants | were rectors of the same place for the next 151 years, a break of twelve years excepted. For five generations the clerical descent of this family runs from father to son; then for two generations from uncle to nephew ; then a father and son ; diverging from the main line it goes for two generations from uncle to nephew, who is now living-thus making a total, of eleven generations each represented by one or more clergymen. For a period of over 350 years some member of the Collins family has been in hely orders. The Coline family has been connected with the Church for half a century longer than I the Newsome family, to which, however, it must yield the palm as regards the, distinction attained by its members. - Chambers A Cure for Constipation and Headache.

The root is a bulb-like nodule situated a trifle below the fat cells. Its office is to collect, to store, and to discharge nutriment to the individual bair. Each hair is furnished with a capillary-like tube, called the medu a, running from the root to the extremity. The nourishment required for the informasupport and growth of the hair is distribut d by means of the medulla. The root is supplied with its food material by a net work of small blood vessels. Throughout the Through all the principal points in Canada and medulla and cortex of the hair is distributed avariable quantity of pigment, which gives the color to the hair. This pigment is of various hues, and hence we have what is known as red hair, auburn, brown, black, etc. The hair turns grey owing to the disappearance of the pigment, and to the medulla developing numbers of air-cells in its place, which reflect the light in such a manner as to Vegas Hot Springs, NM, Los angelos, Cal, owing to a vertain amount of the pigment one portion of the hair may consist of the air cells, while another portion may retain | wo w the pigment. The disappearance of the pigment is brought about by mal-nutrition. Mal-nutrition is caused by anything which has the effect of diminishing the blood supply to the roots, or may be attributable to some defect in the root trains daily except Sunday or the hair itself. The microscopic canal, which conveys the nutriment from root to extremity, may become clogged, and thus the fortilizing ingredients cut of rom their natural destination, Bodily, weakness, ill-health, and anything which nterferes with the normal circulation of the blood, may thus give rise to grey hair. Mental strain, prolonged study, grief, or anxiety by diminishing the blood-supply in the network of veins mentioned, robs the hair roots of their nourishment, and grey ness results. Another, which may be described as the external cause, is brought about by a want of attention to the scalp. It is necessary to the proper growth and preservation of the hair that the skin should be kept in a healthy condition. By the use of greasy and oil substances, such as pomades, hair oils, &c. the pores of the skin become clogged. Ventilation is thus cut off, and the pores are unable to excrete the effete matter which accumulates beneath them, and the ha suffers in consequence. And, again, fri circulation of air along the surface of the scalp is often prevented by the accumula-tion of dust and scurf, which is brought about by a too spuring allowance of scap and water, and hence the essential supply of external nourishment is out off, and the hair droops and fades.
