New York, Oct. 29.—About two years ago an eccentric resident of Brooklyn erected a monument to himself in one of the cemeteries. It was quite an imposing affair, the shaft being nearly twenty feet high, with a broad eight-sided base, bearing large and bold the power of the Catholic church in Brooklyn. It would be difficult to find in any part of the world a finer set of children than those in the Catholic parishes. Many of the school girls are provided with handsome uniforms, and all of them were well clad.

But the great turn out was on the 21st, when Brooklyn covered herself with glory. Brooklynites got mad when people speak of the city as "the little country town." On the 21st, Brooklynites got mad when people speak of the city as "the little country town."

Contract advertisers allowed two changes per week; more frequent changes must be paid for.

All advertisements are to be made in double columns and in type not less than 10pt. No exceptions.

Advertisers' charges are equally popularized based on experience of cost of publication.

POLITICS AND THE WHIT.

Saying that man's religion is affected by his politics, and that about practical politics (not the other things taught in our colleges) there is a great deal that is useless; the college professor was not pleased when he criticized theology (or presuming "oddities" with them). The best answer so far supplied—written, by-the-way, in advance of the criticism—comes from good Bishop Fox, of the Methodist Episcopal church, whose article in the North American Review is worthy of wide perusal. What is the chief function of the church? "It is man," says Dr. Fox, "Incorporate and voice the best conscience of the age, not shrinking when the sins to be denounced are entrenched behind political barricades; nor holding up the sins of rulers to the most merciless rebuke because of their far-reaching and sig-nally destructive influence. The duty of a minister to defend truth and justice is not a trifling, but rather intensified, by the circumstances that the awful form of a relentless tyrant confronts him, or that sundry millions of his fellow creatures are induced by demagogues to try to make evil good by their ballots. An inward voice from which there is no appeal urges him to ' obey God rather than men.' It is conceivable that a minister must, at times, sacrifice taste, preference, ease, convenience, anything but conscience, to do man good. He is most useful if he bars his way to usefulness by turning his pulpits into a political hustings. The mere contests of party politics, which involve no great moral issues, should have no place there. And this is quoted from a keen student of politics: "The doctrine that politics is the broadest, richest and most important field of Christian endeavor will probably seem to many a startling proposition, but it is one in the truth of which the future not only of republican government, but of Christian civilization depends. Neither of these can be regarded as secure until it is accepted as a principle of Christian ethics that a man can no more stand idly by and see public evils prevail and expect to be held guiltless than if he were a willing witness of his brother's murder."

The neglect of political duty by good men is the chief source of all suffering from misgovernment by bad men." Finally—and this must be a source of encouragement to the local clergy who are interesting themselves in the condition and comfort of the workmen—Bishop Fox holds that pre-eminently it is the function of the church and of the pulpit, at this age, to mediate between capital and labor, and win classes assiduously to fill in the awful chasm between wealth and poverty. The rapid accumulation of enormous wealth in the hands of the few, the graft of the ill-regulated toll of the many, and the grinding and soulless arrogance of some monopolies, which raise the price of the necessities of life, in order to multiply fortunes already colossal, and over against these the general, fomented, bitter and increasing discontent among the poor, are, to the bishop, potent and alarming facts. They will strike most people in the same way after they have carefully read and reflected upon the arguments which he advances.

ADVISORIAL COMMENTS.

Bradley, the former secretary of the public works department, and suspended for crookedness during the scandal regime, is to go to parliament. What about Perley? He is the best of the lot, but his birth not his own reward at Ottawa.

"A tariff to foster special industries is wrong," he says, "and it breeds large fortunes which furnish funds that can be used in bribery to sustain its existence. Large campaign funds furnish temptation to bribe, which is immoral, and I, as a clergyman, must protest against any system that can build up a corruption fund." One clergyman that is not afraid of the politicians in his congregation.
