They were men of faith and hope and their works corresponded to their belief. What saved them from the dark gulf of despair was that they considered all things were God's things. He referred to the difference of the customs in the present time and that of the 12th century. History taught them the world had been progressing during the ages and they saw the results of the spread of an optimistic spirit. There were great men in modern times but their were no great communities. Now the power and greatness of the few is diffused throughout the whole community and every man has equal opportunities to Chas, Lannen, agoden years. become great. The kingdom of heaven, funeral will leave his late residence, Gore street to morrow, (Tuesday) at rest p.m. which means the kingdom of truth, has grown wider. There has never been a time when the generate power of the brain was as great as it is to-day and each man has a share in this power. As thoughtful men of to-day surveyed the field they are hopeful for the world. The world is progressing, probably not as rapidly as they would wish, but their wishes would always be in advance. He explained that antoward circumstances and obstacles of every kind may be overcome by optimistic belief, and there is hardly an obstacle that may not be surmounted by a heroic spirit. The optimistic spirit is a couragous hopeful spirit, and they should take up obstacles that may be in the way and turn them to proper account. Was it not a hopeful sign that the labor question and other questions of importance to the welfare of men are receiving the attention of the best brains and best hearts of their He next spoke of the scientific dealing of he present times, in the matter of religion. Many looked upon this with alarm, but it was wholly misconceived that the influence of truth could suffer harm so long as men believed in the goodness of the Lord. He did not see anything alarming in the scientific tendencies, but he saw in them an influence that should provoke their gratitude. Truth is to be received when the evidences are present no matter where it meets men. fruth can lead to more truth. Optimism give strength to the heart, light to the eye, substance to the brain and nerve to the palaied arm, turns defeat into victory, and enables men to overcome their troubles. He concluded by relating helps to the de relopment of the optimistic spirit. They must cultivate a composed spirit, read books and seek society that have a pure, healthy vitality. Examine every side of the account and total up their mercies and they would find the list large. Right surroundings and fellowship promote optimism. If they want good enviroments, good safe fellowship, they can have them in circles and classes, and if they did not get them it was because they did not want them. One of the best helps to enable them to cultivate the optinistic belief is work. They must encourage bright, hogeful temperments, seek healthy society and amusements and lend themselves to every good work. The enthusiastic workers in every field of good work are the optimists of the world. They should enter the ranks of the tolling men and women in SHAW the churches, bearing the burden and heat of the day, and they would not become
