The county's true policy towards the house of industry is a generous one, which would meet with generosity in I return, since they would find themselves much more heavily taxed if they set up a separate institution of their own than by the most liberal aid to the house of industry. Iwo separate institutions would cost a great deal more to support than one larger one. and as the question of room is an element in the matter recently discuss ed, why should not the county build an other associations which often lead to ly needed, and would ascure a special grant from government? An arrangement might then be made with the house of industry by which its incurables could be kept in the wing and the county poor, not coming under the head of incurables, in the ordinary wards. Such a place would benefit the helpless poor of both city and county, who meht to be the chief consideration in the matter, at a less coat than could be done by any separate efforts.

This suggestion is thrown out for the our elderation of beauvolont and intelligent farmers. Such an enterprise would uncubtedly be large y aided by the individual iberality of wealthy ottizms, and the farmers could greatly reduce the running expenses by contributions of produce. Last year, for the first time, a number of armers in the township of Kingston kindly contributed denstions of vegetables in response to a call from the superintendent,

These were duly acknowledged in your solumns, with the thanks of the directors or contributions, which certainly effected a saving in last year's, expenses. It is very far from the fact, however, as seems implied a paragraph in your paper, that these contributions were sufficient, or nearly so, for the consumption of the house during the hat sixteen months. The house of industry has a large piece of ground attached to itbrought under improved cultivation, has supplied the institution with a large proportion of the vegetables ared, and has enabled the inmates to be much better supplied. Last year the yield potutous was nearly enough, for the whole year's consumption. This year unwas smaller, but as it has not been a good made to the farmers for what they would not probably be able to spare. The farmers farmers in one scotion of the township of specimens of mangolds weigh from fifteen Kingston has been all that has been given in this way from the county. And while the generosity of the individual 'farmers was much appreciated, still the total amount of these voluntary contributions is searcely proportionate to the voluntary con tributions of the citizens of Kingston, dur ing the year before last, emounting to some seven or eight hundred dollars. - A DIREC Manager Wilson Criticized.
