THE OFFICE OF MAYOR. Mr. Sheppard, who is a candidate for the mayoralty of Toronto, has been named one of the candidates and has visited all the great cities. As a consequence he is supposed to be familiar with the needs of the hour, municipally speaking, and he says: "I don't believe the office of mayor is properly appreciated. It is the most important office in the city and the one that is most responsible."

THE AMERICAN IDEA OF MUNICIPALITY. The American idea of municipal government is to keep the mayor as free as possible of the petty administration into which some members of the council perpetually plunge. The president of the council is the average American citizen, the chief of the council is the average citizen who has to do with the ordinary conduct of his business and has no functions outside of those he exercises as the governing head of the council when it is in session. The mayor has his office where he is consulted upon civil business and where all the legislation of the council passes in review before him. He has the power to suggest legislation to the council, and where his suggestions are not acted upon he has the power to veto. But in any case he is free from prejudice, and is independent of the council, and is not subject to its caprices. He is expected at all times to give his opinion on what he has to do in the discharge of his duty, which is entered by a majority of the council. It has occurred to the administration of the council that it would be better if the mayor were not intimately associated with the work of any committee, if he reserved his opinions and expressed them only when he did not coincide with what that committee did, if he maintained in all things and in all respects a dignified independence, but it is doubtful if any man here is prepared to go so far as Mr. Sheppard, and it is doubtful if he will find much sympathy from the Toronto people in the new departure he so warmly advocates. It is quite within his power to do something unique in public life, but he has to do it in the reform that is a great gain which only a successful election can bridge over.

COMPARISONS OF POLITICAL TRENDS. Comparisons are often times, especially when they have a political trend and have a bad political effect. The conservatives of Canada are just now endeavoring to make the farmers feel that they haven't really anything to complain about. They may not make as much out of agriculture as they used to do, but they shouldn't grumble. Besides they are not any worse off than the farmers of England who want protection, and it is not a good thing they would use to get up looking after it. Times are very hard, it is said, and the farmers are suffering. Are they? Let Mr. McMillan, in the Nineteenth Century, answer: "The English farmer lives well, perhaps too well, all things considered; he pays only his fair share of taxation, and he pays his laborer rather than that over what there is to be made. He is not a pauper, as he is often called, but he is not a pauper either by his own expenditure or by the wages paid by other industries. His wife and daughter are well educated and live in comfort, at the most expensively, and the dairy and the hen house, and having a servant, or perhaps two, to do all the work of a well-appointed household. All this, too, under free trade, which means that they have cheap clothes, furniture, household utensils, farm implements, coal oil, and a thousand other things which are taxed so high in Canada as to be numbered among the luxuries. True, the farmer has been working the farmers in England, poisoning their minds and inducing a few of them to demand protection, but they do not know the meaning of it as the farmers of Canada do, and if they ever have the experience they will never forget it."
