ST JACOBS OIL

TRADE MARK

THE GREAT REMEDY FOR PAIN

NEURALGIA.

Every one of the thread like nerves has a latent power to create excruciating pain, the limit of which is simply the limit of human endurance. Neuralgia is a pain in these fibrous torments, all pulsing at once, from which St. Jacobs Oil is

EVERY APPLICATION GIVES RELIEF.

Characteristics. Nothing is so subtle in its approach, nothing so acute and distressing, and certainly nothing yet discovered so completely subdues its ravages and so permanently conquers its pangs as St. Jacobs Oil, for

EVERY BOTTLE CONTAINS A CURE.

Symptoms. Neuralgia is defined to be a nerve disease, the chief symptom of which is an acute pain, intermittig, which follows the course of the nerve branch affected, and St. Jacobs Oil cures

PROMPTLY, PERFECTLY, PERMANENTLY.

How To Use It. Apply St. Jacobs Oil frequently, gently rubbing the afflicted parts; apply to the whole extent of the nerve soreness; keep up a gentle friction until a burning sensation is produced. Once cured, always cured, for

BLOWS IN A BANK.

California Millionaires Have a Lively Fist Fight.

A ROMANCE OF THREE CITIES.

The Trouble Started in London, Was Fomented by Publications at New York and Reached a Climax in the Parlor of a San Francisco Bank.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]

Thus began a battle which has created more excitement than any "mill" of modern times. The principals were not pugilists. The contest was not prearranged. It took place, too, in a twenty-four foot ring, but in the private parlor of a great bank. It ended indecisively owing to the interference of outsiders, but the popular impression is that Mackay would have won had the affray continued "to a finish."

The trouble had its origin in London, waxed fierce in New York and culminated with fisticuffs at San Francisco. All the world has heard of John W. Mackay, who as a miner in Nevada and California built up a colossal fortune. C. W. Bonynge is less wealthy and less widely known. Yet he also is a millionaire, and these two men, who are bitter enemies, have many points of similarity in their careers.

Mackay is an Irishman by birth, while Bonynge is an Englishman. Both went to the Pacific coast and there made their money. Mackay married a widow with a daughter; so did Bonynge. Mackay's family went abroad, so did Bonynge's. Mrs. Mackay's daughter married an Italian prince. Mrs. Bonynge's daughter was engaged to the son of an English earl. Mrs. Mackay took a house at Buckingham gate, London. Mrs. Bonynge took a house at Prince's gate, London. Both entertained lavishly, and they were, in a certain sense, social rivals.

While preparations were being made for Mrs. Bonynge's presentation at court, and for the wedding of her daughter, Miss Daniels, to Viscount Cantelupe, the aristocratic people of the English capital were deluged with copies of a New York weekly in which appeared a scandalous and cruel "exposé" of the family. The article charged that Mrs. Bonynge had been divorced from her first husband, and therefore was not eligible for introduction to the queen. It went even further, and declared that Miss Daniels' father was a malefactor, and had "done time" in a western penitentiary.

A copy of the paper, evidently by intent reached Earl Delawarr, the father of Viscount Cantelupe. The aged nobleman promptly sent his son on a voyage round the world and canceled the engagement. The publication naturally created a huge flutter, especially as it came right on the heels of a printed discussion regarding Mrs. Mackay's origin and antecedents. Next there arrived, also from New York, a book entitled "Mrs. Jonathan Abroad," which purported to give the "facts about the women from America who have gained social distinction in Europe." The notice of Mrs. Mackay is highly laudatory; that of Mrs. Bonynge entirely the reverse.

While all this "inside" family history was being discussed, or, to be more accurate, some time previous to the latest developments, the following was printed, evidently by the sanction of those concerned, in the columns of The Pall Mall Gazette.

So much comment has appeared in the press concerning Mrs. Mackay during the last few weeks that a representative sought the truth from Mrs. Mackay herself. Mrs. Mackay, however, absolutely refused, as always, to be interviewed, and handed over our representative to a gentleman whom she described as a tried and trusted friend, whose authority was as good as hers.

"Yes, sir," said the tried and trusted friend in question. "There is not a scintilla of truth in the ridiculous libels circulated in some of the papers that she has ever been either a laundry woman, a boarding house keeper, or anything else but a lady of birth and education. The whole story to which you allude is one of the most fantastic fictions which were ever put in circulation by vindictive malice. She was the daughter of a valiant officer in the American army, who fought in the northern ranks during the great civil war. Col. Hungerford's was one of the most respectable families in California. He gave her a first class education, which enables Mrs. Mackay, among other things, to converse fluently in French and Spanish, and hold her own in conversation with the best company in London or Paris. She married at the age of 16 a young physician of San Francisco. He died soon after, leaving her an only child, the daughter who is now the Princess Colonna. She was still young when she met Mr. Mackay. The married life was blessed by the birth of two fine boys, the eldest of whom is now a student at Oxford. He is now 19 years of age. A year or two after the birth of her first son her doctors ordered Mrs. Mackay to go to Europe for the sake of her health, and for the last sixteen years she has been one of the most familiar figures in the society of Paris and London.

"She has few expensive tastes. She neither runs a theatre, an opera house or a newspaper. She does not own a yacht, neither does she gamble. If you want to know what she does with her money ask the Catholic church, to whose charities she is a beneficent donor."

"But why, then, in the name of wonder, should she be so maligned?"

"Surely it is the most natural thing in the world. Mrs. Mackay is at the top. Others who have tried to get to the top and failed cannot be expected to feel amiable."

This extract makes clear the statements which had annoyed Mrs. Mackay, and her version of her past as well. But to Mr. Bonynge is attributed the remark that Hungerford was only a barber; "and a decided good one, too." It appears that the Bonynges charged the attacks on them to the Mackays, and vice versa. So when the heads of the rival houses met the other day in the president's room of the Nevada bank at San Francisco they wasted no words.

Bonynge was seated in a chair when Mackay entered. The latter "jumped" his enemy at sight, and soon the air was filled with coat-tails, legs, fists and curses. President Hellman hopped about, animated by dismay and horror. He clinched first one combatant and then the other, but his pacemaking efforts only brought him bruises, and he desisted on the appearance of the clerks, who finally forced a cessation of hostilities. Then Mr. Mackay went home in one hack and Mr. Bonynge in another. The latter has made no public statement regarding the fracas, but from the former the following version of the affair was procured:

"It happened in this way. Long ago I suspected that Bonynge was the instigator of certain vile attacks upon Mrs. Mackay which appeared in certain newspapers in New York and London. Having proof that this was true, I determined to punish him the first time I met him. Yesterday, when I entered the president's room in the Nevada bank, I saw Bonynge sitting at the desk. As I entered Bonynge turned and saw me. He had a malignant look and made a threatening movement. I struck out with my right arm and hit him in the left eye. Then I hit him again, and called upon him to put up his fists and fight like a man. But instead of fighting he fell and clasped me around the knees like a coward. His blood poured all over my trousers and upon the floor. The clerks rushed in and removed him. The sound thrashing he received he well deserved for circulating those stories about Mrs. Mackay. I'm not so handy with my fists as I used to be twenty years ago upon the Comstock, but I have a little fight left in me yet, and I will allow no man to malign me or mine.

John W. Mackay's history might be termed a romance in real life. He was born in Dublin fifty-seven years ago, and when quite young left Ireland for America. The California gold excitement was at its height, and he pushed on to the Pacific coast. There he met Flood, O'Brien and Fair. These four joined forces, and later on became wealthy and famous as the "Bonanza Kings." It was in the west that Mackay also met the lady who is now his wife. The subsequent ambitions, achievements and doings of the family are so well known that they need not be recounted here. As for the Mackay-Bonynge quarrel, it may have culminated and closed in the recent fist fight, or it may be that it will take on a fresh and more furious phase. That time alone can decide.

HER SAD LIFE ENDED.

Death Rings Down the Curtain on a Curious Domestic Tragedy.

The recent death of Mrs. Mary Ellen Flack at her home in New York city has revived popular interest in a painful and curious case, for this woman was apparently the victim of a conspiracy and a fraudulent divorce, the conspirators being her own husband and son. The public interest is greatly heightened by the fact that the husband is James A. Flack, a prominent politician, and but lately sheriff of New York county.

And yet there is doubt enough about the case to encourage the friends of the ex-sheriff, for Mrs. Flack made so poor a witness that her husband and son were convicted on the documentary evidence only. She was 60 years old, and married James A. Flack in 1854. Their early married life was happy, but of late years they had been estranged, and to her astonishment she learned in 1889 that she had secured a divorce, though her husband had never mentioned the subject to her or changed his conduct in any particular.

MRS. MARY E. FLACK.

It soon appeared that their son, William Flack, had presented the papers to her, and accepting his statement that it was an ordinary business transaction she had signed them, thus charging her husband with adultery and consenting to a suit for divorce.

On March 31, 1890, both the Flacks were convicted of conspiracy and sentenced—the father to four months' imprisonment and a fine of $500, and the son to the same fine and two months' imprisonment.

They appealed, the higher court granted a new trial, which has not yet taken place, and their lawyers think the death of the injured wife and mother ends it. The son remained with the mother the last few months of her life; they were thoroughly reconciled, and her last act was to kiss him and extend forgiveness. Thus ends a strange, sad, eventful history.

North Dakota Honors an Editor.

Henry C. Hansbrough, recently elected senator from North Dakota at the end of a protracted contest, was born at Prairie du Rocher, Randolph county, Ills., Jan. 30, 1848, received a common school education there, and in 1866 went to California, where he learned the printer's trade. He was somewhat precocious, both in business and politics, for at the age of 22 he published a daily paper in San Francisco, and soon after took a responsible position on The San Francisco Chronicle.

H. C. HANSBROUGH.

In 1879 he resigned the position of news editor on The Chronicle and went to Chicago and finally to Dakota, locating at Devil's Lake, where he now publishes The Inter-Ocean. He took an active part in politics as a Republican, and after holding some minor positions was elected to congress in 1888, receiving 26,077 votes to 12,000 for Daniel W. Marrata, Democrat. He was chosen senator on the seventeenth ballot, defeating Gilbert A. Pierce, the present senator, who has served but a year.

Why Actors Grow Fleshy.

A new reason is advanced for the tendency to stoutness prevalent among actors and singers. It is said that the assimilation of food is greatly aided by the active and extreme expansion of the lungs, incident to public speaking. The great foe of the stage folk is fat, and now they can trace the connection between the life they lead and the resultant adipose.

She Liked to Write Checks.

Mamie Smith has gone before a higher court than any on earth. She was a wealthy young woman who had a mania for uttering forged checks. She was arrested at Denver three months ago, and pending trial secured release on bail. The other day she died of pneumonia. Her property in Kentucky yielded her an income of $4,000 per year.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.

When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.

FRONTENAC LIBERALS.

THEY ARRANGE TO BRING OUT A CANDIDATE.

Three Former Conservatives Declare Against the Policy of the Macdonald Government — Rousing Addresses — Committees Named to Select a Candidate.

A great gathering of the Frontenac reformers was held in the reform hall on Saturday at two o'clock, many prominent and influential farmers being present. The meeting was opened by a speech from T. Dawson setting forth the reasons for which the meeting was called, namely, the dissolution of parliament and the advisability of choosing a candidate. Mr. Dawson held that this could be best done by mass meetings as the best way in which to arrive at the choice of the people.

J. L. Haycock was surprised to read the different notices calling the meeting together, and thought that unity was a great need in this fight and the only thing to bring it to a successful issue. The president, T. Dawson, and H. T. Shibley, secretary, tendered their resignations, and the thanks of the meeting were unanimously tendered for past services.

Duncan McRea expressed his admiration of Mr. Shibley's efforts and expressed regret that the meeting had not been unanimously called.

Mr. McRea was then voted to the chair, and H. Bawden moved, seconded by S. Lyon, that Thomas Dawson be re-elected to the presidency. Mr. Clyde and J. L. Haycock, who had been previously nominated, withdrew, and Mr. Dawson re-assumed the chair and opened with an earnest speech, in the midst of which the news arrived that Mr. Gunn had accepted the nomination for the city. This was greeted with enthusiastic applause.

S. Lyon then moved that H. T. Shibley be re-elected secretary. J. L. Haycock nominated A. Ritchie for the office.

Mr. Dawson expressed a wish that Mr. Shibley be elected again, as he was the right man in the right place. H. T. Shibley was unanimously elected.

The president then asked for expressions of opinion as to whether the meeting should select the candidate at once or postpone the event for an adjourned meeting.

Thomas Clyde thought the qualifications of a man for the candidature should be of the highest order and the electors should use their greatest efforts in his support. No more favorable time to redeem the country could be found than now. Mr. Dawson expressed his delight at the many present for the first time and who had formerly held different views. Michael Graves, as representing this class, said that although he had once been a conservative, he could no longer endorse the actions of the government and he would from henceforth be a free trader and a supporter of the party who worked for the farmers. He related many of the ill-effects of the national policy which he had felt personally.

Mr. Mosier, Wolfe Island, another reformed conservative, said that he had 150 tons of hay in his barn and, thanks to the great national policy, it was as good as useless to him. When he sold it he would have nothing over.

Archibald Staley heartily endorsed the sentiments expressed in favor of free trade and thought that the present member for Frontenac had been making a very poor use of his time, although he himself had previously supported him. The McKinley bill, an outcome of the administration of the tory party, was too well known to need comment. It had destroyed the natural market of Canadian farmers, namely, the United States. He advocated combined effort and predicted that this would lead to a great surprise for the Hon. George A. Kirkpatrick on March 5th next.

Donald Fraser would not presume to dictate to the farmers what their actions should be. They had borne the N. P. yoke very long and patiently and a change was now within their reach. He wished the convention every success. A death-bed repentance was not what the Canadian farmers wanted, but a practical reform while the country was not entirely ruined.

John McGrath stated his belief to be that the conservatives were never so shaky as now. They were flocking into the reform ranks every day.

J. L. Haycock would like to see an executive committee appointed and report the names of those suitable for candidature. Mr. Bawden recommended that the number wait upon the expected nominee and be certain of his acceptance.

K. J. R. Pense, as a county elector, thought the reformers should act at once, decidedly and with unanimity, and push ahead. Each elector would be repaid threefold for his vote in case of a reform victory by its indirect results in benefitting the country.

R. J. Kilbeck referred to the great somersault taken by Hon. G. A. Kirkpatrick on the corn duty question. He had travelled through every state in the union from one end to another, in the past few years, and found Canadians in every place he went. The present member had not done anything particular, or deserving of commendation, except sticking to Sir John through thick and thin. How many farmers' sons were in government positions? Very few. But how were the conservative citizens represented in the Kingston post office for instance. Why, they are thicker than bees.

J. D. Thompson expressed his great happiness that the city had their old candidate in the field and were it not thus, Sir John and his hordes would be flooding the county and working against the farmers. The farmers should act quickly and success would perch on their banners on the night of March 5th. The millions of Canadians driven to the United States by the present government were referred to; the effects were disastrous to Canada. Mr Thompson called attention to the hay market as an instance of the workings of the McKinley bill and the scores of loads of hay selling for many dollars less than a few miles across the line. Cotton could be taken to China for 18c. per lb, while 22c was the price to Canadian farmers showing the higher position that Chinamen occupied in the minds of the government than the Canadian people.

Five delegates were named from each municipality to meet in their respective subdivisions and select a candidate. The delegates will meet on Wednesday morning, the 11th inst., at ten o'clock in the reform hall, choose the standard-bearer from the names presented, and have a ratification meeting in the afternoon.

Some Foolish People

Allow a cough to run until it gets beyond the reach of medicine. They often say, "Oh, it will wear away," but in most cases it wears them away. Could they be induced to try the successful medicine called Kemp's Balsam, which is sold on a positive guarantee to cure, they would immediately see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Price 50 cents and $1. Trial size free. At all druggists.

Meeting at Oates.

"We wish to know whether the Perth road company can demand toll on a condemned road or not." At 7.30 the large audience was called to order, then after appointing a chairman and secretary, Jabez Stoness was called upon to explain his view of the above question. Many in the meeting also gave their opinions. A subscription was made and a large sum secured. The people of Loborough want lawful roads or free roads.—COM.

Notice.

We wish to give the public notice that our carpet sale continues all the year round. 1,875 yards sold during January. We have some handsome patterns still left, which we will offer at a still further reduction. Remember the price of carpets have advanced, and our present prices for Brussels and tapestry carpets are far below the manufacturers' present price. We guarantee you a saving of 15 per cent. by buying your carpet now and buying from R. McFaul. All other dry goods proportionately cheap. R. McFaul.

No Shadow of Doubt.

No sane person doubts that what we say of B.B.B. is true! The evidence of its power and popularity is too overwhelming to confute, besides it is all home testimony, making it certain that B.B.B. will cure dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, scrofula and all blood diseases.
