A PRENCH BALL GOWN. The bodice and round skirt are in white gauge over a foundation of pink satin. is strewn with almond shaped spots in ve vet. The shoulder knots, bows, braces, etc., are in pink velvet. Corresponding with these are the circular rows of velvet around the bottom of the skirt, also the fly bows that loop up the festoons heading the rows. Empire fashions still prevail i full dress toilets, and it is told that the dressmaking of that particular period will continue to be adopted by debutantes Princess dresses, with the train and bodice in one, are fashionable. Some bodices are pointed back and front. Some end at the waist, where they are trimmed with lace or flowers.

New Dress Fabrics.

The first importations of spring woolen dresses are homespuns, cheviots, tweeds and fanciful plaids and stripes with rough surfaces. Beige and tan shades are always popular in the spring, and are now of the lightest mushroom tints. A special fancy this beason is the use of pale green shades for the accessories of these light tan dresses, and of darker green and pale yellow with gray gowns. Onting dresses are of finely twilled striped flannels, and the stripes are placed bias, lengthwise and crosswise in a single gown.

Scotch ginghams remain the popula and for children's frocks throughout the year. They are brought out this year in I when I write it. the very light colors that will be seen in all new fabrics, the special novelty being copies of Louis Quinze brocades in chine, stripes of flowers and vines on white grounds alternating with solid stripes o pale rose, sky blue, mauve, gray or green Flowered batistes with lace stripes are pretty summer fabrics, thinner and softer than ginghams, and with more "body" than lawns. Percales are revived. Sateens have a duller luster than formerly, and the cotton cheviots are of better quality | you!" than were last season's. - Harper's Bazar.

Mr. Checkley's theory is that if one reared to know his muscles, and especially the joints of his bones, what they are to be used for and how to use them, he will naturally in his various movements throughout the day get all the exercise he needs and will develop properly. A man in such a condition may be called upon to undergo any unusual exercise, and will be equal to the occasion without the sensation of lameness or soreness that now generally follows unusual exercise. All his muscles, having been constantly brought into play, are in a heal thy condition and do not suffer. The entire secret of Mr Checkley's method. therefore, is to teach his pupil what he doesn't know about the formation of his body, and to have him cultivate his body by using his mind. He generally begins by showing the pupil the incorrect way of standing, which is apt to be the pupil's own way, and then the correct way.

Mr. Checkley is a very good advertisement for his own system, as his body is beautifully developed, and every muscle is under such perfect control that lie can move it, and alone, at will, no matter how subordinate or insignificant a rouscle it may be.

When you have cut it just fold over the top part, which is the bonnet, making the fold on the dotted line; then you will at once see the crown and cape take shape. Now fold the arms over and you will have Mrs. Hawkeye complete. The little girl is made the same way, only that she is smaller may make the bonnet a different 'color by using paper which is of different colors on the two sides. - Little Men and Women

The Telegraph Boy in Siberia. The wonderful modern invention, the telegraph, has not only spread over our own country and Europe, but has been introduced into many wild and uncivilized countries, Siberia among the number. our young readers will take a map of Asia they will find in latitude 50 north and longitude 106 east, upon the borders Siberia and Mongolia, a small town named Kiakta, and they will perhaps surprised to learn that there is a continu ous telegraphic communication between

It is an interesting event when crossing Chinese Tartary to meet the Mongol courier burrying along with his message; appearing to stand almost upright in his stirrups, he burries past at full gallop with a shout of pride and exultation and he is soon far away on the desert steppes. There are relays of borsemen constantly ready, and in this way in from ten to twelve days after its transmission from London the message is received in China.

In Siberia the cold is often so very severe that all whose business takes them much into the open air must envelop themselves in warm clothing to prevent their limbs being frostbitten, and this explains the dress of the telegraph boy, in our picture. which is taken from his carte-de-visite.
