SABBATH OBSERVANCE. No one can accuse Mr. Charlton of political motives in introducing into the dominfor parliament a measure which aimed to put a check upon Sabbath descration. The evil is growing, and growing rapidly, and to men who are interested in moral reforms the outlook is alarming. In the larger cities Sabbath amusements of a questionable nature are on the increase, and to such an extent that men in high authority, in the state and in the church, have called upon the government to do its duty. The Canadian parliament may have thought better of Mr. Chariton's bill but for Sir John Thompson who gave to the discussion a party bias and threw out the signal which brought about a division of the members upon the old lines. Sir John said the legislatures of the provinces had passed upon the question of Sab bath observance, and with the legislatures Are now in order. To make he did not think the commons should in terfere. How sensitive he has become touching the rights and prorogations of the provincial legislatures ! It makes a heap of us for your supplies. We have difference how the facus will affect the party. Hon. Mr. Foster, some years ago, when out of parliament, not expecting election to it, and certainly not expecting elevation by any shuffle however clever, could see no difficulty in the government raising revenue enough to get along without the collections from the liquor traffic, yet now he says the loss of $7,000,000 is an insuparable barrier to the adoption of prohibitory measures. Sir John, no doubt, was in sympathy with his party when it sought to embarrass the Cotario government when it vetoed acta which subsequently had the endorsemen the privy council, but now he is all magnanimity. And why? The Sab-

the Royal academy of England. Seven wars later he established a studio in New fork, and soon after married the daughter of George Innis, the landscape painter. Hartley's first great work was "The Whirlwind," a conception rarely beautiful and expressive. "Satan Vanquished," exhibited at the American Art Association of New York in 1888, brought him a gold medal. The colossal statue of Miles Morgan, "The Puritan," which adorus the city of Springfield, Mass., added laurels to his name. He was chosen in 1890 to execute the Daguerre memorial. He founded the Salamagundi club, one of the most popular artists' organizations of New York, and was elected professor of anatomy of the Art Students' league in 1878. Two years later he became president of that organization. He has been engaged by the Cushman Monument association to execute a large statue of Charlotte Cushman, and is also busy on a bust of Susan B. Anthony and a statue of Mary M. Hamilton, to be exhibited at the World's fair.

Both Day and Evening Occasions. Many of the French hats are as large as parasols. The prettiest are of transparent rush straw, garlanded with trails and bunches of roses, and devoid of anything in the nature of a lining. They are very becoming to fresh young faces. A novelty in dressy hats for young ladies is what is known as the basket straw hat. This is 'n a thick braid, plaited in a flat round shape, and wired around the edge. It is bent, it point in front, and into two shallow scal lops at the back. Newer than the Conti-nental hats are the four cornered ones in Neapolitan straw. Leghorn hats with wide brims have been reintroduced, this time with the brims crinkled. A favorite trimming for these are estrich plumes.

a carriage toilet, but is appropriately worn on many occasions. It is of nut brown ross, with their foliage, is placed under the raised up brim at the back. One of the newest French bonnets has a square front and a crown as flat as a board.

It is composed of fine transparent straw lined with yellow silk, and decorated with a cluster of yellow roses and brown velvet loops. The back is caught up with a rose and finished off with narrow velvet strings. Some of the Greek bonnets are finished off with a wreath of small blossoms which surrounds the wearer's back bair.

An example consisted of two narrow bands of pink velves covered with passementerie and a cluster of black and gold Marguerites. The wreath for the back hair was of pink rosebuds, and the strings were of velvet the same color. Numbered with the crownless bonnets for evening wear are those consisting of a narrow brim of straw, rolled back from the face, and surmounted by flowers and a bow of crepe and ribbon. Jet is again in favor for coming and convenient bonnet for matrons.

Styles in Dress Skirts.

The skirts of Paris dresses are as varied in shape as in the fabrics of which they are composed. They are cut straight or bias, with gores or without, clinging or flowing, with paniers or with flounces, and are uniform only in being objectionably long and in their tendency to greater breadth. The so called seamless skirt, straight in front, with a bias back seam concealed in the fullness, is much used for wool dresses where the width of the fabric serves as the length of the skirt. To give variety, the top of this skirt is drawn down in slight folds to disclose a curved piece of embroid ered silk set on each hip, an insertion of the embroidery is set near the foot, or else a narrow flounce is added. Such skirts are four yards wide, yet French modistes sometimes out them open down the middle and insert a gored front breadth of silk trimming all the edges of the wool skirt with a narrow passementeria of balls of slender pendants. Slightly gored and bell shaped skirts are greatly widened in new gowns. The flounce at the foot is not so deep, and is fully gathered. Skirts of thin fabries are draped on the hips as slight paniers, or else a separate breadth curves from front to hips as paniers, then descends in jabots each side of the back. The skirt with folded front breadth and sides lapped forward is on many stately gowns. Pretty challies and India silks have these lapping side breadths trimmed with wide lace. Worth puts a series of lace flounces up the front and back of some skirts. He also introduces panels in various ways, making the skirt appear to open upon them.-Harper's
