When and the wounding and capture of his little band Mrs. Spring went to Charlestown, Va., to nurse them. She promised two of them—Stevens and Haslett—that, they should be buried, as they prayed, in free soil, and accordingly their bodies were taken to Perth Amboy and interred at Eagleswood. No stones mark the spot; only a picket fence incloses it.

The old mansion, and indeed the entire estate, has fallen into decay, though once a trade was nearly completed by which Daniel Draw was to have paid $170,000 for tion. It was for a time the home of the Phalanx, a small group of Communists who appear to have achieved nothing and who are even now forgotten. The Springs were people of culture and refinement. Day and Evening Gowns. The two gowns illustrated in the accompanying out show fashion's latest tendencies in day and evening attire. There is but little to say concerning the day dress. It is simply a nest, ladylike costume of dark blue cloth outlined with narrow gold braid. The bodice has a turreted edge, but no superfluous trimming. It would show off a symmetrical figure to great advantage. The skirt is ornamented with a deep hem, headed by a line of gold, and is arranged in fanlike plaits at the back. Such a gown would be smart enough for church and quiet enough for the street. The evening dress is of Japanese silk, ornamented with a fichu of transparent soft stuff edged with lace. The neck is cut modestly low in a V back and front, and the elbow sleeves are finished off very daintily with ruffles of lace. Two lace frills decorate the skirt, and panniers at the top make the waist look small, and are universally becoming to slight figures. The favorite colors are cream, light blue, pink and mauve. Stripe patterns will be worn more than checks this summer. The per box at Wade's drug store, Kingston. cream volored stuffs are streaked with bright lines of green, plnk, blue or gold. A pretty material in pale pink had narrow stripes of white silk, and a beautiful fabric in ivory white, made expressly for a costumer who wanted something exclusive, was patterned at intervals of about an inch and a half with three lines of green. Tennis rackets and balls in blue or red on a light ground look rather smart. For short, loose fitting jackets there are smooth surfaced cloths in pretty colors, patterned with small spots in a contrasting shade. Elaborate tennis costumes are usually
