SHALL HE WED HER!

When I met Taylor at the Club the oth ght, he looked so cheerful I scarcely knew "What is it?" cried I, advancing with

"I am going to be married," was his gay reply. "This is my last night at the Club."
I was glad, and showed if. Taylor is a man for whom domestic life is a pecessity. He has never been at home with us, thoug we all liked him, and he in his way liked us "And who is the fortunate lady?" I inquired; for I had been out of town for some lime, and had not as yet been made acquainted with the istest society news. "My intended bride is Mrs. Walworth, the young widow".....

He must have seen a change take place in my expression, for he stopped. "You know her, of course," he added, after a careful study of my face.

I had by this time regained my self-pos-

"Of course," I repeated, "and I have always thought her one of the most attractive women in the city. Another shake upon it, old man!"

But my heart was heavy and my mind perplexed nothwithstanding the forced cordiality of my tones, and I took an early opportunity to withdraw by myself and think over the situation. Mrs. Walworth? She was a pretty woman, and what was more, she was to all appearances a woman whose winning manners pespoke a kindly heart. "Just the person," I contemplated, "whom I would pick out for helpmate of my somewhat exacting friend, f-" I paused on that if. It was a formidable one and grew none the smaller or less important under my broodings. Indeed, it seemed tydilate until it assumed gigantic proportions, worrying me and weighing so heavily upon my conscience that I at last rose from the newspaper at which I had been hopelesdy staring, and looking up Taylor again asked him how soon he expected to become a benedict. His answer startled me. "In a week," he replied, and if I have not asked you to the ceremony it is because Helen is not in I supposed be finished the sentence, but did not hear him. If the marriage was so near, of course it would be folly on my part to attempt to hinder it. I drew off for the second time. But I could not remain easy. Taylor is a good fellow and it would be a shame to sllow him to marry a woman with whom he could never be happy. He would feel any such disappointment as keenly, so much more keenly than most men. A lack of principle or even of sensibility on her part would make him miserable. Anticipating heaven, it would not take a hell to make him wretched, a purgatory would do it. Was I right then in letting him proceed in his intentions regarding Mrs. Walworth, when she possibly was the woman who-. passed and tried to call up her countenance before me. It was a sweet one and possibly a true one. I might have trusted her for myself, but I do not look for perfection, and Taylor does, and will certainly go to the bad if he is deceived in his expectations. But in a week! It is too late for interferenceonly it is never too late till the knot is tied. · As I thought of this, I decided impulsively, and perhaps you may say unwisely, to give bim a hint of his danger; and I did it in this

"Taylor," said I, when I had him safely in my own rooms. "I am going to tell you a bit of personal history, curious enough, I think, to littere t you even upon the eve of your marriage. I do not know when I shall see you again, and I should like you to know how a lawyer and man of the world can sometimes be taken in." He nodded, accepting the situation goodhumoredly, though I saw by the abstraction with which he gazed into the fire that I should have to be very interesting to lure him from the thoughts that engrossed him. As I meant to be very interesting, this did not greatly concern me-"One morning last Spring," I began, "I received in my morning mail a letter, the delicate permanship of which at once attracted my attention and awakened my curiosity. Turning to the signature, I rend the name of a young lady friend of mine, and somewhat startled at the thought that this was the first time I had ever seen the handwriting of one I knew so well. I perused the letter with an interest that presently became painful as I realized the tenor of its contents. I will not quote the letter. though I could, but confine myself to say ing that after a modest recognition of my friendship for her, quite a fatherly friendship, I assure you, as she was only eighteen, and I, as you know, am well on towards fiftyshe proceeded to ask in an humble and confiding spirit for the loan-do not start-of $50. Such a request coming from a young girl well connected and with every visible sign of being generously provided for by her father, was certainly startling to an old bachelor of settled ways and strict notions, but remembering her youth and the childish innocence of her manner, I turned over the page and read as her reason for proffering such a request, that her heart was set upon aiding a certain poor family that stood in imbut that she could not do what she wished.

mediate need of food, clothes and aedicines, because she had already spent all the money allowed her by her father for such purposes, and dared not go to him for more, as she had once before offended him by doing this, and feared if she repeated her fault he would carry out the threat he had then made of store ing her allowar or vitogether. But the family was a deserving one and she could not see any persper of it starve, so she came to me, of whose goodness she was assured, convinced I would understand her perplexity and excuse her, and so forth and so forth, in language quite childlike and entreating, which, if it did not satisfy my ideas of propriety, at least touched my heart and made any action which I could take in the matter extremely difficult. "To refuse her request would be at once to mortify and aggrieve her; to accede to it and give ber the $50 she asked a sum by the way I could not well spare-would be to encourage an action easily pardoned once, but which if repeated would lead to unpleasant complications to say the least. The third course of informing her father of what she needed I did not even consider, for I knew him well enough to be sure that nothing but pain to her would be the result. I therefore compromised the affair by inclosing the money in a letter, in which I told her that I comprehended her difficulty and sent with pleasure the amount she needed, but that as a friend

I must add that while in the present instance she had run no risk of being misunderstood or unkindly censured that such a request made to another man and under other circumstances might provoke a surprise capable of feading to the most appleasant consequences, and advised her if she ever again found herself in such a strait to appeal directly to her father, or elasto deny herself a charity which she was in no position to bestow. "This letter I undertook to deliver myself for one of the curious points of her communication had been the entreaty that would not delay the help she needed trusting the money to any hand but my own, but would bring it to a certain hotel down town and place it at the beginning of the book of Isaiah in the large Bible I would find lying on a side table in the small parlor off the main one. She would seek it there before the morning was over, and so, without the intervention of a third party, acquire the means she desired for helping a poor and deserving family. "I knew the hotel she mentioned and emembered the room, but I did not remember the Bible. However, it was mire to be in the place she indicated, and though was not in much sympathy with my errand respected her whim and carried the letter downtown. I had reached Main street and was in sight of the hotel designated when addenly on the opposite corner of the street I mw the young girl herself. She looked as tresh as the morning and smiled so gayly I felt somewhat repuid for the annovance she had caused me, and gratifled that I could out matters short by putting the letter directly in her hand, I crossed the street to her side. As soon as we were face "How fortunate I am to meet you. Here is the amount you need scaled up in this letter. You see I had it all ready." "The face she lifted to mine wore so blank a look that I paused, astonished. "What do you mean ?" she asked, her eyes looking straight into mine with such a no-cence in their clear blue depths. I was at once convinced she know nothing of the "I am very glad to see you, but I do not in the least understand what you mean by the amount I need," And she glested at the letter I held out with an air of distrust

"You cut me short in my efforts to de charitable action. I heard, no matter how, that you were interested just now in a de titute family and took this way of assisting Her blue eyes opened wider. 'The poor are always with us," she replied, "but I know of no espicial family just now that require any such belp as you intimate. If I did papa would give one what assistance I'meeded."

I was greatly pleased to hear her say this for I am very fond of my young friend, but I was deeply indiguant also against the unknown person who had taken advantage of my regard for this young girl to force money from me. I therefore did not linger at her side, but after due apologies hastened immediately here where there is a man employed who to my knowledge had once been a trusted member of the police.

Telling him no more of the story than was necessary to ensure his co-operation in the plan I had formed to discover the author of this fraud. I extracted the bank-notes from the letter I had written and put in their place stiff pieces of manilla paper. Taking the envelope so filled to the hotel already referred to, I placed it at the opening chapters of Isaiah in the Bible, us described. There was no one in any of the rooms when I went in, and I encountered only a bell-boy as I came out, but at the door I ran against a young man whom I strictly forbore to recognize, but whom I knew to be my improvised detective coming to take his stand in and note who went into it. At noon I returned to the hotel, passe immediately to the small parlor and looked into the Bible. The letter was gone. Coming out of the room, I was at once joined by my detective. "Has the letter been taken?" he eagerly

some place where he could watch the parlor

His brows wrinkled and he looked both troubled and perplexed.

"I don't understand it," he remarked "I've seen every one who has gone into that room since you left it, but I do not know any more than before who took the letter. 'You see," he continued, as I looked at him sharply, "I had to remain out here. If I had gone even into the large room, the Bible would not have been disturbed, nor the letter either. So, in the hope of knowing the rogue at sight, I strolled about this hall, and kept my eye constantly on that door, but"-He looked embarassed, and stopped. "You say the letter is gone," he suggested after

"Yes," I returned "Nobody went into He shook his head. that room or came out of it," he went on, "whom you would have wished me to follow. I should have thought myself losing time if I had taken one step after any one

"But who did go into that room," I urged, impatient at his preplexity. "Only three persons this morning." returned. "You know them all." And he mentioned first, Mrs. Couldock. Taylor, who was lending me the superficial attention of a preoccupied man, smiled frankly at the utterance of this name. "Of course, she had nothing to do with such a debasing piece of business," he observed. "Of course not," I repeated. "Nor does it seem likely that Miss Daws could have been concerned in it. Yet my detective told me that she was the next person who went into the parlor." "I do not know Miss Daws so well," remarked Taylor, carelessly. "But I do," said I, "and I would as soon suspect my sister of a dishonorable act as this noble, self-sacrificing woman." "The third person?" suggested Taylor. I got up and crossed the floor. When my back was to him, I said quietly-"was Mrs. Walworth." The silence that followed was very pain ful. I did not dare to break it, and be. doubtless, found himself unable to do so. It must have been five minutes before either of us spoke; then he auddenly cried:

'Where is that detective, as you call bim? I want to see him." "Let me see him for you," said I. should hardly wish Sudley, discreet as I con sider him, to know you had any interest in Taylor rose and came to where I stood. "You believe," said he, "that she, the woman I am about to marry, is the one who wrote you that infamous letter?" I faced him quite frankly. "I do not feel rendy to acknowledge that," I replied. "One of those three women took my letter from out the Bible, where I placed it; which of them wrote the lines that provoked it, I do not dare conjecture. You say it was not Mrs. Couldock, I say it was not Miss Dawes, He broke in upon me impetuously

"Have you the letter!" he asked I had, and showed it to him. "It is not Helen's handwriting," he said Nor is it that of Mrs. Couldock or Miss Dawes," me for a moment in a wild "You think she got someone to write it for her?" he cried. "Helen! my Helen! But it is not so; it cannot be so. Why Huntley, to have sent such a letter as that over the name of an innocent young girl who, but for the happy chance of meeting her as you did, might never have had the opportunity of righting herself in your estimation, argues a cold and calculating selfishness closely allied to depravity. And my Helen is an angel-or so I have always

The depth to which his voice sank in the ast sentence showed that for all his seeming confidence he was not without his doubts. I began to feel very uncomfortable, and not knowing what consolation to offer, ventured upon the suggestion that he should see Mrs. Walworth and frankly ask her whether she had been to the hotel on Main street on such a day, and if so, if she had seen a letter addressed to Miss N- lying on the table of the small parlor. His answer showed how much his confidence in her had "A woman, who, for the sake of paying some unworthy debt or of gratifying some whim of feminine vanity, could make use of a young girl's signature to obtain money would not besitate at any denial. She would not even blench at my questions." He was right. "I must be convinced in some other way." be went on. "Mrs. Couldock or Miss Dawes do not either of them possess any more truthful or ingenuous countenance than she does.

and though it seems madness to suspect such women"-"Wait," I broke in. "Let us be sure of all the facts before we go on. You lie down here and close your eyes; now pull the rug up so. I will have Sudley in and question him. If you do not turn towards the light he will not know who you are."

Taylor followed my suggestion, and in a few moments Sudley stood before me." I opened upon him quite carelessly. Sudley," said I, throwing down the newspaper I had been ostensibly reading. "You remember that little business you did for me in Main street last-month! Something I've been reading made me think of it again." "Yes, sir. "Have you never had a conviction yourself as to which of the three ladies you saw go into the parlor, took the letter I left hid "No, sir. You see I could not. All of them are well known in society here and all of them belong to the most respectable fami-lies. I wouldn't dare to choose between

"Certainly not," I rejoined, "unless you had some good reason for doing so, such as having been able to account for the visits of two of the ladies to the hotel and not of the "They all had a good pretext for being but I managed to remark nochalantly: "Could you not tell whether any of these Indies opened the Bible?"

"Not without seeming intrusive."
I sighed and dismissed the man. When he was gone I approached Taylor. "He can give us no assistance," I cried.
"My friend was already on his feet, looking very miserable.

"I know of only one thing to do," he remarked. "To morrow I shall call upon Mra louldock and Miss Dawes, and entrest them to tell me if for any reason, they undertook to eliver a letter mysteriously left in the Bible of the Hotel one day last month.

They may have been deputed to do so, as I be quite willing to acknowledge it."
"And Mrs. Walworth? Will you not sak

last mouth, She was looking quietly up at me, her lips parted, her eyes smiling and expectant, but at the mention of that hotel I thought—and yet I may have been mistaken-that a slight change took place in her expression, if it was only that the glance grew more gentle and the smile more marked.

But her voice when she answered was the same as that with which she had uttered her "I do not remember," she replied, "yet I may have been there; I go to so many places.

Why do you ask?" she inquired. "Because if you were there on that morning-and I have been told you were you may be able to solve a question that is greaty preplexing me." Still the same gentle, inquiring look on her face; only now there was a little furrow of wonder or interest between the eyes. "I had business in that hotel on that morning," I continued. "I had left a letter for a young friend of mine in the Bible that lies on the small table of the inner parlor, and as she never received it I have been driven into making all kinds of inquiries in the hope of finding some explanation of the fact. As you were there at the time you may have seen something that would aid me. Is it not possible, Mrs. Walworth?"

Her smile which had faded resppeared. On the lips which Taylor so much admired a little pout became visible, and she looked quite enchanting.

hotel at all," she protested. "Did Mr. Tavlor say I was there?" she inquired, with just that added look of exquisite naivette which the utterance of a lover's name should call up on the face of a prospective bride. "No," I answered gravely; "Mr. Taylor inhappily, was not with you that morning.

She looked startled. "Unhappily," she repeated. you mean by that word?" And she drew back, looking very much displeased. I had expected this, and so was not thrown off my guard. "I mean," I proceeded calmly, "that if you

I was equally emphatic in my reply That is only just. You ought to know why I trouble you with this matter. It is because this letter of which I speak was taken from its hiding place by some one who went into the hotel parlor between the hours of 10:30 and 12, and as to my certain knowledge only three persons crossed its threshold on that especial morning at that especial time. naturally appeal to each of them in turn for an answer to the problem that is troubling me: You know Miss N-..... Seeing by accident a letter addressed to her lying in a Bible in a strange hotel, you might have thought it your duty to take it out and carry it to ber. If you did and if you lost it--

"But I didn't," she interrupted warmly, "I know nothing about any such letter and if you had not declared so positively that I was in that hotel on that especial day I should be tempted to deny that too, for have no recollection of going there last

"Not for the purpose of rearranging veil that had been blown off! "Oh!" she said, but as one who recalls forgotten fact, not as one who is tripped up in an evasion. I began to think her innocent and lost some of the gloom which had been oppre-s-"You remember now," said I. "Oh, yes, I remember that."

Her manner so completely declared that her acknowledgements stopped there, I saw it would be useless to venture further. she were innocent she could not tell more, if she were guilty she would not; so, feeling that the inclination of my belief was in favor of the former hypothesis, I again took ber hand and said: "I see that you can give me no help.

am sorry, for the whole happiness of a man, and perhaps that of a woman also, depends upon the discovery as to who took the letter from out the Bible where I had hidden it on that unfortunate morning." And, making her another low bow, I was about to take my departure when she grasped me impulsively by the arm. "What man?" she whispered, and in a lower tone still, "What woman # I turned and looked at her. beaven!" thought I, "can such a face hide I summoned up in comparison before me the plain, honest and reliable countenace of Mrs. Couldock and that of the cosnely and unpretending Miss Dawes, and knew not

"You do not mean yourself," she continued as she met my look of distress. "No," I returned; "happily for me my welfare is not bound up in the honor of any woman." And leaving that shaft to work its way into the heart, if that heart was vulnerable, I took my leave, more troubled and less decided than when I entered.

For her manner had been absolutely that of a woman surprised by insinuations she was too innocent to rate at their real importance. And yet, if she did not take away that letter, who did! Mrs. Couldock! Impossible. Miss Dawes? The thought was untenable, even for an instant. I waited in great depression of spirits for the call knew Taylor would not fail to make me that

When he came I saw what the result of my revelation was likely to be as plainly as see it now. He had conversed frankly with Mrs. Couldock and with Miss Dawes and was perfectly convinced as to the utter ig norance of them both in regard to the whole affair. In consequence, Mrs. Walworth was guilty in his estimation, and being held guilty could be no wife for him much as he had loved her and urgent as may have been the causes for her act.

"But," said I, in some horror of the consequences of an interference for which I was almost ready to blame myself now, "Mrs. Couldock and Miss Dawes could not have done no more than deny all knowledge of this letter. Now Mrs. Walworth does that,

"You have seen her? You have asked "Yes, I have seen her, and I have asked her, and not an eyelash, drooped as she affirmed a complete ignorance of the whole Taylor's head fell.

"I told you how that would be," he murmured at last. "I cannot feel that it is any proof of her innocence. Or rather," he added, "I should always have my doubts," "And Mrs. Couldock and Miss Dawes?" "Ah!" he cried, rising and turning away, there is no question of marriage between either of them and myself." I was therefore not astonished when the week went by and no announcement of his wedding appeared. But I was troubled and am troubled still, for if mistakes are made in criminal courts and the innocent someimes, through the sheer force of circumstantial evidence, are made to suffer for the guilty, might it not be that in this little question of morals, Mrs. Walworth has been wronged, and that when I played the part of arbitrator in her fate I only succeeded in separating two hearts whose right it was It is impossible to tell, nor is time likely ! alve the riddle. ANGLO-MEXICAN BANK On demand, pay to the order of E. A. Cheiriton two hundred and fifty deliars and place the same to account of G. F. Wann, To London and San Francisco Bank, San Francisco, Cal., U. S. A. The Anglo-Mexican bank, of Juarez, Mexico, is a mythical bank, and he claimed to have large sums deposited in another mythical bank in Australia. He passed off two of these drafts in Fresno, Cal., then speedily took his way to San Francisco, where he passed off two more for amounts less than $500 each, and had not the alightest difficulty in getting them cashed. From San Francisco he went to Philadelphia, New York and Havana. but did not find such childlike confidence at either place. It is estimated that he has Block, over Nisbet's Bookstore Entrance raked in about $11,000.

He is 5 feet 9 inches high, about thirt years old, quite attractive in appear ance, an easy converser and ready writer. He has worked on several journals, and his favorite signature of "Kismet" is tolerably familiar to readers of the sporting and live stock journals. He will now have a fine opportunity to write up state prison life from the inside, for he is wanted at many places, and if sentenced on each charge that can be sustained "prison life" will his specialty for the next meneration.

Words of a Great Historian and Writer. A well known historian and writer once said: "Let me be restored to perfect health, and bodily vigor; give me refreshing sleep at night, and banish the weariness which oppresses me when I rise each morning, and will willingly sacrifice all the fame and nonors that have been bestowed upon me by my countrymen and mankind in general." Honor, fame and renown without health, cannot enable a man to enjoy life and its pleasures; the poorest beggar often lives happier and more contented. The man who finds his appetite failing; or his stomach weak and disordered; his nerves unsteady; his muscles twitching; who experiences a fulness in the head, and headaches; who does not sleep well; who gets up in the morning with a coated tongue, and a feeling of weariness, is on the highway to suffering and serious troubles. These symptons require the immediate use of that valuable remedy known se Paine's Celery Compound. Its use means certain restoration to perfect health, strength, robustness and mental rigor. In all the above mentioned troubles its value is now firmly established and well known. Men and women, old and young, find it just what they require in every emer gency and difficulty. Try it reader and be convinced.

His Skull Was Smashed. On July 26, 1890, the body of an unknown young man was taken from the Hudson river near the New York city side. It was hastily examined, a county physician decided that the unknown had been accidentally drowned, and the corpse was consigned to a pauper's grave. About the same time John Gustave man just of age, disappeared. His hunt which consumed months. Finally he ascertained that the person fished from son, Then, on inquest and a verdrowning was rendered. The elder Weller had his son's remains exhumed and a very cursory exam

"The patent medicine man usually has the good sense to confine himself to ordinary, everyday diseases. He leaves to the physician cases in which there is immediate dan ger to life, such as violent fevers. He does this because, in the treatment of such cases, there are no other elements of importance besides medicine, such as proper dieting, good nursing, a knowledge of the patient's strength and so on. Where there's is no absolute danger to life, where the disease is one which the patient can diagnose for himself or which some physician has already dotermined, the patent medicine maker says fearlessly: 'I have a preparation which is better than any other known and which will cure you.' In nine cases out of ten his statement is true."-N. Y. World Interview. It is absolutely true as regards St. Jacobe Oil, the great remedy for pain.

His Punishment None Too Mach. Proper punishment was inflicted the other day on a man who committed a causeless and wanton act of cruelty. His name is Herman Beyer. He was formerly employed at a livery stable in New York city. Soon after his discharge a stallion called "the Hencket horse" was found dead in a stall. There was a deep wound in his head where his skull had been erushed in with a blunt instrument. Bever said that the animal had been kicked by one of the mares. A bloodstained hammer was found in a closet to which Beyer alone had the key. This was exhibited to the jury, with a piece of the closet board on which it had lain and which was also stained with blood. and the frontal bone of the horse's head showing where he had been struck. Recorder Smyth sentenced Beyer to two years and five mouths in state prison. The horse was valued at $200.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Cantoria. When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria. When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

My Toothache Is an exclamation heard every hour in the day. Toothache is the most common ailment of young and old, and in the aggregate inflicts more suffering than perhaps any other single complaint. A one minute ours is just what every person dealres to possess. Vet. College stantly in relieving the agony, and a sample byttle affords a quantity sufficient for 100 applications. 10 cents fills the bill. Poleon's Nerviline is the only positive remedy for toothache and all nerve paine. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

> Mr. Gustav Navuald, Jr., Tivydale, Pred ericksburg P. O., Texas U. S. A., writes: "I was out by a scythe and knife in my hands and feet; I suffered three weeks. A half bottle of St. Jasobe Oil cured me." K.D.C. Its merits prove its greatness.
