THINGS MIGHT BE LOWER. Who pays the duty ? The removal of the sugar duties was an excellent object lesson as to that question. The price of sugar fell nearly, but not quite, the amount of the duty. On the other hand the consumers of tobacco complain that the added duty of five cents per pound is made the pretext for the retailer charging them five cents per plug or fifteen cents per pound on their "Myrtle Navy." These facts indicate that the consumer pays and has paid the duty on sugar and tobacco at least. And if on these

Were it not for the undisputed records of history the observer of today would scarcely believe that Turkey once menaced the civilized world; that the predecessors of the present ruler stormed Constantinopie and obliterated the Roman empire, swarmed through Europe to the very gates of Vienna, dominated the Mediterranean, subjugated Africa as harge growd was present to witness six candidates being immered by older william Ebersole. Then there is a national debt of about sillion dollars. It had its beginning in 1854, when the reigning sultan was induced to negotiate a small loan. By additions, interest, usury and the various methods ncident to "financial operations" the original sum of $15,000,000 has been swollen to enormous proportions. So, penniless, powerless and doomed the Turk sits inactive as there passes from him the even nominal control of the country in which are situated the two most holy cities of his religion—Mecca, where Mohammed was born, and Medina, the place at which he died and where he sleeps side by side with his famous successors, the caliphs Abubekr and Omar.

The revolted districts of Arabia include the Sinaitic peninsula, the Hedjaz, or land of pilgrimage, in which are located the holy cities, and Yemen, which borders the Red sea and extends back to the fertile interior. There the aprising began and there flourishes Mocha, a city world famed as a center of the coffee trade. The other portions of the peninsula form the semidesert domain of the wandering tribes of Bedouins and Wahabees. The faithful of Islam believe that signs and portents, the crash of thunder and the trembling of thrones, heralded the birth of Mohammed. The palace of the Persian king rocked on the bosom of an earthquake, the waters in the Lake of Saws disappeared and some occult power extinguished the sacred fire of the Parsees, while the priests who ineffectually nursed the dying flame trembled at the awful phenomenon.
