A Fireproof House of Paper. Paper seems to be an article to the uses of which there practically seems no limitation. To pails, wheels, axles, dishes, etc., there has been added a more extensive application of paper to the needs of everyday life by the building of an hotel constructed of this material. This novel residence, which has just been finished and is situated in Hamburg, has been made entirely of paper boards, which, it is said, are of the hardness of wood, but possess an advantage over the latter material in that they are fireproof, this desirable end being effected by impregnation with certain chemical solutions.
