There is a good deal of smuggling going on along the St. Lawrence river, and it is mostly done by the summer visitors at the toms officers at Cape Vincent, Clayton, Thousand Island park, Alexandria Bay and Westminster park, but Uncle Sam is cheated out of a good share of the duties. The quaint old city of Kingston, Canada, receives the benefit of this smuggling trade. The summer visitors at these resorts go to makes the trip daily, and they are given from two or four hours to see the sights of the town. A good share of the excursionists take advantage of this time and go "shopping." They return to their summer home on the same boat that carries passengers from the R. W. & O. trains and are unmo they are Kingston excursionists or passen gers from American towns. The officers do their duty and prevent the smuggling as far as possible. The fact remains however, that smuggling is done. The steamer Islander returned from Kingston this even ing and transferred her excursionists at Clay ton to steamer St. Lawrence, which carried the regular passengers from the afternoon trains into Clayton. At least three out of five of these excursionists had a package of goods purchased at Kingston, and two or Wilson.
