PROF. HALE'S CHARGE,

Of all the days that's in the week
I dearly love but one day,
And that's the day that comes betwirt
A Saturday and Monday.

It was an old, old song. But the voice that sang it wasn't old by any neans. It was fresh and clear and sweet and strong. And it came ringing out from the dirty, foul-smelling alley, reminding one of a time when I heard a bird song come floating up from the dark hold of a ship.

Down the street, as if he were in a great hurry to get somewhere, came Prof. Hale the man who taught the children of the rich people uptown how to sing.

He looked tired and worried is if the harmony of the day had jangled all out of tune. All at once he, too, hear I the voice, and now it was singing:

and now it was singing :

Tis then I dress up is my liest, And walk out with my Sally; She is the darling of my bears, And she lives down in our alley.

The grave Professor seemed sud ienly to forget his hurry. He stopped stock still.

By jove! What a voice! he ejaculated, as the tone sank to a plaintive vibrating minor that thrilled through the murky atmosphere like a burst of aunshins. And then he went in pursuit of the voice.

In a two-wheeled huckster's cart, which had been disabled and deserted, stood a little girl about nine years old. She had on a red calloo dress. It was pretty dirty, but apparently the little girl thought she was She had washed her face back as far as her cars, so that he could see that she was very pretty. Her skin was a clear olive. Her eyes were big and bright and brown. Her hair was almost the color of mahogany and hung in thick, tangled curies down below her waist.

She wore no stockings, but on her feet was a pair of blue satin boots, with tassels on the top, and little pointed heels, such as the chorus girls in the opera wear.

She was standing with her head thrown back, her little hands clasped tightly acress her chest, singing with all her might.

Around her were grouped about a dozen little gamins of the alley, who, if not appreciative listeners, were very en- self, desperately, "I must not fail."

And she did not. Her voice trem

When the Professor appeared the enter-tainment stopped and the little singer looked as shy and as confused as if she had been caught doing something.
But the Professor did not notice her confusion. He pushed his way right through the dirty, sticky little group and up to the "What is your name?" he asked eagerly, "and where do you live?" Shyly twisting her fingers into the folds of her red skirt, the little girl answered, in audience had piled in front of the foot-

"Gran'ma," answered Alice. mother?" asked the Professor suddenly.

Instead of answering him Alice looked at her audience and giggled. Prof. Hale evidently knew how to gain his point, taking a silver coin from his pocket, he said:

"I'll give you this if you take me to your will you go now?"

gaandmother. Will you go now?"
"Oh, won't I, just!" exclaimed Alice, and she scrambled over the wheel of the cart. "Come right this way." The Professor gingerly picked his way down the dirty steps into the dingy cellar which Alice called home. Sitting in an old rocking chair, emoking a rank-smelling pipe, was a very old woman. She was so nearly blind that she didn't notice at first that Alice had company. She heard the lootsteps, and began : "I think it's time ye was a gettin' home, you good for nothin' little trollop. An' if ye ain't brought the price o' a sup o' eay and a bit o' bacon it will be the worse

"I've brought a gentleman with me," said Alice." "He wanted to come and see you, and here's a quarter for your tea and bacon. He gave it to me for bringing The old woman lifted her shaking head and looked at the Professor with watery. bloodshot eyes. The Professor didn't waste 'Madam," he said, "this little girl has a wonderful voice. I want to take her home the shoulders, asking in a frightened and teach her to sing. Are you willing that voice :

she should go !" "And what would I be doin' widout her whined the old woman. "And me wi' the heumatiz that bad I can't be puttin' me foot to the floor.

"Well," said the Professor, "here's a twodollar bill that I'll give you. And I'll send you that amount each week if you will let me have the little girl. The old weman hesitated a little at first thinking that perhaps the Professor would increase his offer. But when she saw that he had no such intention she accepted eagerly enough. And then the gentleman took Alice by the hand and led her away. while the grandmother sat mumbling over the crisp new greenback, without so much as giving her a word of farewell. Alice began to be frightened. She com menced to cry and kept on crying, even when the car stopped and the Professor led her up to the front of a beautiful house looking right off on the park.

Still she cried and begged him to let her go back to her miserable alley and her wretched old grandmother. She didn't feel any better when she got inside of the hall and stood on the soft carpet among the pretty lightsome flowers. You see she wasn't used to it. "Come down here, Kitty. I want you."

And Kitty came, a beautiful little yellow-haired fairy, all in ribbons and lace, who told his daughter to go and call her nurse, When she appeared he said : "Mary, you may take this little girl up stairs and give her a bath, and dress her some of Miss Kitty's clothes, To-morrow you may see about getting her some clothes of her own, and you may fix up the little room next to yours for her to sleep in. is going to stay with us for a while,"

It was night in the gay city of Paris, and the Grand Opera House was all ablaze with Up and down through the gilded foyed gay couples were walking, and as they walk

I am sure you have guessed by this time that the singer was no other than our little girl of the alley, Alice Flynn. It was a daring thing to bring her out in the gay capital before all the critics, but Prof. Hale was a man who dared. He proved that when he first took charge of Ation. At last it was time for her to appear. She came forward almost as tirridly as she first Connecticut, the land of temperance and steady habits, furnishes a strange tale of a natural phenomenon that startled the re-ligious people of Brookfield one Sunday night recently. About the time for the evening service, and when the congregation was awaiting the beginning of worship it began to storm in the distance, and the shower rapidly approached until it was directly overhead. Suddenly there was a burst of thunder, sounding somewhat like a gong in different tones, and so marked were the musical notes as to be sweet and almost buglelike. As quick as a flash the eyes of the congregation in the church were directed to the ceiling, and the suppressed cry of, "What's that!" could be beard. "It's thunder!" was the exclamation. All were startled, although some were more frightened than others. There were those who, doubtless being a little conscience stricken, thought of the final reckoning.

A Sure Remedy for Neuralgia. Neuralgia is one of the most common and distressing complaints incidental to this climate. It is not confined to any particular season, for whilst most general in winter seasons, yet many suffer its excruciating agony in the heat of summer. In late years the form of disease has become better known, and consequently the means of relief have become greatly increased in numbers, as well as in efficacy. Among the most power-ful and penetrating combinations, placed within the reach of the public for the relief of neuralgia, we can mention no remedy equal to or more certain than Polson's Nerviline. Its power over pain is something wonderful, and we advise a trial for neuralgia, or any other painful complaints.
