The second day of the bridal tour brought them to the Kimball House at Atlanta. That evening there was a disturbance and early next morning Manager Porter, in response to an imperative call, sutered the room to find a pale and trembling bride and an excited groom who demanded: "Are you a believer in Jesus Christ?"

Of course the hotel man was, so the preacher went down with him and began writing queer telegrams. The police in-terfered and he then raved fleroely. A day in the Providence infirmary quieted him and he returned to his bride, only to go wild again the next day. Friends came and took him in charge. He insisted on a suit against the city for $100,000 and one against the Kimball House for $50,000.

His whiskers grew in a little tuft like Uncle Sam's, straight out from the point of hischin; his linen duster was evidently the same he had purchased to attend the State fair several years ago. He came out to the front end of the depot, gazed around in a bewildered fashion up and down and across the street, and half a dozen cabmen rushed for him headlong. "Cab, sir? Cab, sir? This way!"

Lyman Gallup, of Clarksburg, sixteen rears old, went to Stamford pond last week with a party of companions for a few days | Navy Blue Flannels, all wool, from 25c. of eamping. He was not long in getting all he wanted of camp life, and Thursday he bade adien to the party and started for home. Stamford pond is a very wild region, far from the nearest settlement, and one of the party more familiar with the wilds than young Gallup accompanied him through the forest to a point from which, it was thought, he would have no difficulty in finding his way home. Shortly after separating Gallup lost his way and wan-dered for a long distance through the mountain solitude, so deep it seemed as if t might never before have been visited by He had with him a shotgun, also a basket, in which he had carried provisions to camp. As he hurried on through the unbroken forest, filled with alarm lest night should overtake him before he should find his way to the settlement, his attention was attracted by a black, shaggy animal, closely resembling a Newfoundland pup. He knew at once that it was a cub, and, leveling his gun, he brought him down. The cub was placed in the basket and the omeward tramp was resumed, young Gallup rejoicing over the proud trophy he was bringing from the wood. Suddenly there was a great commotio in his rear. The threshing of brush and anapping of twigs convinced him that the mother bear was on his track. The situation was decidedly uncomfortable. Gallup broke into a run, and tore down the mountaln at a prize winning pace, but the tornado in the rear drew nearer. The boy soon came to the conclusion that the weight of the cub was too much of a andicap in this race, and the game was thrown into the bushes. Very soon after the commotion ceased, the old bear stop-ping as soon as she reached her cub.—North Adams Transcript.

Remarkable Success of Rivetting by Elec tricity-An Improved Stone-cutting Saw Protection From Furnace Heats -Fibrelia-The Making of Specis-Hea

saring the Mean Sea Level;

It seems to be demonstrated that the new method of riveting by electricity is a re-markable success and will take its place among the most important improvements in the industrial art. The apparatus comprises a transformer, the pri-mary of which is formed of a heavy cop-per bar, laid parallel to a coil of fine wire, and over the two are clamped two angular segments of iron, forming, when united, a complete iron shell, which is claimed to in-crease the efficiency of conversion. The structure creates a current of great volume in the copper bar. In the ends of this bar are mounted an anvil, provided with a regulating screw for moving it up or down, and a follower provided with a screw, in the circuit of a primary is placed a choke coil provided with a regulating switch for cutting in more or less of the coil by which the strength of the current induced in the sec strength of the current induced in the sec-ondary may be controlled. The bars or pieces of metal are placed upon the anvil and the rivet dropped in place, the anvil being then screwed up until the plates of metal are firmly held between it and the two insulating legs secured to the upper limb of the copper bar. The face of the bar is covered with insulating material, except at a central point where it is left have, and is covered with insulating material, except at a central point where it is left bare, and, when forced against the rivet, the latter establishes connection from the upper limb of the primary bar to the lower limb, the current developing sufficient heet to make an upsetting of the rivet shank very easy under the pressure of the screw.

The protection of workmen from furnace heat, as practiced at the Menden and Schwerte Iron Works, in Westphalis, is said to be by means of a rectangular iron can be made to cover the whole working side of the furnace or can be pushed aside when not required or when it interferes est the furnace with a pipe bored through with small holes about three-quarters of an inch apart, which is in connection with the service pipe supplying water for cooling the side of the bed. When in use the inside of the plate is kept constantly wet from the supply pipe, the small jets trickling down to the gutter at the bottom and running away to the cooling basin at the side; a short inclined plate provided for the cinder to run over; with these exceptions the whole surface is acreened by the water-cooled plates. It is said that this ar-rangement, which was first applied experimentally to a few furnaces, has worked so satisfactorily that it has been fitted to all the puddling furnaces in the works named, the operatives being thus enabled to work full time even in the hottest weather.

Protection From Furnace Heat

An Improved Stone Cutting Saw. French ingenuity has contrived an im proved stone cutting saw of remarkable efficiency—a circular saw having its edge set with black diamonds in the same way as the straight blades, but as the strain on the diamond is all in one direction the setting can be made much firmer. Moreover, as the movement of the circular saw is far more rapid than that of the straight one, the effect of the diamond teeth is increased by the force of the impact upon the object to be cut without the exertion of more power in propulsion. In order to keep the kind of saw at starting in perfect plane, it is made to revolve between two pairs of guides, but as soon as the cut in the stone is deep enough to serve as a guide the temporary ones are removed, the consequence of this management being that the cut surfaces of the stone, instead of being wavy, so as to require subsequent dressing to a plane surface, are straight and smooth, lacking only to be polished. The stone to be cut is pushed against the saw by a carriage similar to that used in sawing wood, and the rapidity with which it is divided is very great. At one establishment where two saws are in use, the green Alpine granite is sawn at the rate of nearly an inch a minute, hard marble at three inches a minute, and marble of moderate hardness, also hard marble of moderate hardness, also hard lime stone four inches a minute.

Further tests of fibrelia, the product of common flax, show that to a certain extent it has not only valuable textile properties of itself, but also as a substitute for cotton or wool; it is claimed, in fact, that 25 per cent. of the fibrelia with 75 per cent. of wool made into broadcloth gives a product absolutely more valuable than if made of wool alone -that is, the real strength of the cloth is enhanced, it is more impervious to water, is warmer, and on account of its tenacity and flexibility, its cementing proper-ty and electrical adhesiveness, fibrelia not only imparts preservative qualities to the wool and increased durability to the cloth, Needs a New Gloss, Tuning, Re- but imparts to the whole a gloss and finish not otherwise attainable. Those who have made the closest examination of this peculiar article say that its specific gravity is greater than that of cotton, and the ma- NOR WICH UNION FIRE INSURANCE SOC" terial is much stronger, in fact, like pure linen. Flax, as is well known, is of a cellular composition, the same as wool, dyes therefore penetrating it throughout, its coloring capacity being equal to wool and fully as darable. Thus it is that fibrelia goods take a better color and hold it with more tenacity and brilliancy than cotton. This being so, cotton fibrelia goods, it is amerted, must excel pure cotton in weight, strength and beauty.

The Making of Spools. Almost all the spools now made are Produced from birchwood and the machinery used in their manufacture has been brough to such a degree of perfection as to reduce their cost to the lowest possible figure. The wood is first sawed into sticks four or five feet long and seven-eights of an inch to three inches square, according to the intend-ed size of the spool. These sticks are thoroughly seasoned, sawed into short blocks and dried in a hot-air kiln at the time they are sawed, holes being bored perpendicular through each block, which is set on end under a rapid revolving longshaped anger. At this stage one whirl of each little block against some small knives that are turning at lightening speed fashions it into a spool after the manner of the pattern provided, and this, too, at the rate of one a second for each set of knives. A row of small boys feed the spool-making machines by simply placing the blocks in a spout, selecting the best, and throwing out the knotty and defective stock. The machine is automatic, excepting the opera-tion performed by the boys. After turning, the spools are placed in a large drum and revolved rapidly until polished. Firewood in Plenty.
