ROME'S FAMOUS CORSO.

No Historic Street in the World That Can

Compare With It. Of all the historic streets the great cities of the world possess, none can surpass, indeed any can vie with, the so-called Corso of Rome, writes W. W. Story. Shorn as it is now of its ancient and medieval glories, it is haunted by trains of memories which consecrate it to every student. In our own times, even in Rome, upstart rivals of mod-Nazionale assume to compare with it. It exceeds it in length and in breadth; it has many modern arts and graces and convergences that the narrow and dear old and she let Mrs. Jenhyas, the goseip, ram-ble along with her string of scandalous veniences that the narrow and dear old atories, although she did not encourage their Corso lacks. Larger and newer buildinings recital by word or look. She even betrayed are ranged along its sides. Broader paths no surprise when Mrs. Jenkyna told her for foot passengers have there been conthat she had been informed by an intimate structed. Gayer shope with larger winfriend that the little woman's husband was down flacut their goods and invite the world of purchasers. Tramways have there been laid down, and the sound of the trumpet from the transway omnibuses warns the carriages and foot passengers to clear the road. All is new, modern, and the birth of to-day. But there are no memories there no gleams and visious of old days and the narrow length of the old and worldfamous street. There are no haunting pirite, no historio reminiscences, no legenda of the old, no figures of the past. There is all the difference between these two streets that there is between the gay young girl just entering into life, full of thoughtless gaysty and looking forward into the future, and the staid old matron in her serene age, who lives more in the past than in the present, and who has delightful stories of times gone by, and the glories and splendors of her youth. Could the Corso be incarnated, with what delight should we hang upon her lips and listen to her old-world tales, and live over with her the long-vanished past ! A Remarkable Rose.

One of the wars of the roses, the flercest and deadliest of them all, was fought on a field where, curiously enough, a rose peculiar to the spot grows, or used to grow, says the London News. It is a race plant now, and the reason is explained by Mr. Leadman in his account of Yorkshire battles, "Proels Eboracensia," published by Messra. Bradbury, Agnew & Co. After describing the terrible conflict at Towton on Palm Sunday, 1461, he says :- "I cannot conclude this story of Towton Field without an allusion to the little dwarf bushes pethe Red.' They are said to have been plentiful at the commencement of this century, but visitors have taken them away in such numbers that they have become rare. Such vandalism is simply shameful, for the plants are said to be unique and unable to exist in any other soil. The little roses are white, with a red spot on the centre of each of their petals, and as they grow old the under surface becomes a dull red color."

Look Here, Do you feel blue and despondent? Do pains rack and tear away at nerve and musole, and have you been disappointed in findspeedy reli f? If so, go at open to any drugstore and buy a bottle of Polson's Nerviline. Polson's Nerviline never fails to relieve neuralgia, cramps, headache, rheumatism, and all internal or external pains, J. B. Polson's Nerviline is sold in bottles at 25 cents by all druggists and county dealers every where.

Concorning Accidents, The collection of large groups of facts about accidents, which has been made necessary by the development of accident insurance, has made a contribution to one department of social exjence that is by no means uninteresting. For instance, says a writer in the Forum, it is a curious fact that a man is much more likely to lose his left eye than his right eye. Statistics show, too, that when a man insures against accident he thereby greatly diminishes the risk of accident and this is probably explained in this way :- When a man's attention is called to danger he fixes his mind on it, and thereby, consciously or unconsciously, makes unusual effort to avert it. It there fore often happens that a man is more likely to be a victim of an accident of a kind that he never thought of than of the kind against which he insures himself. A man, for instance, who handles sharp tools will insure himself against an accident from the use of them, and the first thing he knows he will be drawing pay from an insurance company for an injury done by getting a cinder in his eye. Not only are such odd and ourious facts as those brought : "ight must finish up. I guess I'll make enough by the development of accident insurance, but a great many important groups of facts which bear upon the habits of men and the development of civilization. For instance, accidents are much more common is sparsely settled pertions of the country than in densely settled portions, and they happen more frequently in the middle of winter and in the middle of summer than in the other seasons of the year.

Carlyle's Sense of Humor. With Carlyle, as with all persons of his temperament, the disposition to lay the words on strong is half sportful, and under the gravest over statement lies a humorous intent. He has no thought of being taken chances not to have a sense of humor, and misunderstandings arise; but if he have it, he comes to greatly relish the tasks that Carlyle demands of it. Elaborate Confections of the Finest Silk. . Cambrie, Lace and Ribbons. A dosen nightdresses for one custo at a total cost of something under $100. gives an idea of the elaboration attained in the making of this garment. These elaborate French confections were of the softest and finest silk imaginable, and were fberally trimmed with real Valenciennes lace. No two were alike in color. There was a blue, a pink, a green and a white gown with flowers in a contrasting tint. Several were of quaintly figured eastern silk. All had fichus and ruffles of lace and ribbon strings to tie at the neck. There are plenty of novelties in cambric lingerie. The prettiest nightdresses have a deep turned over collar shaped like a frill, which is continued as a trimming half down the front. Less ribbon is used than formerly.
