Don't envy the the churches may have to our reverence and | rich ; they pay a costly price for all they respect, it counts as only one in a hundred against a game of football. The largest congregation in either city did not number over twenty-five hundred, and there would not have been quarter that number if there was anything to pay, and if they had not been comfortably seated.

At the football game there were over forty housand, many of whom had purchased their seats at costly prices, and they sat for hours on hard benches in a drizzling rain with a degree of discomfort and misery hardly possible to estimate, and imagined they were having a glorious time. Stunning turnouts, all decked with ribbons and flags made the Fifth avenue look like a Venetian carnival. Jeems Yellow plush was in glory his livery, if not spick and span new, was brushed and cleaned, till it looked as if he od that the writ would be issued early in the new year, and that the date of polling cockade, (that peculiar pride of Jeems' heart), reposed the blue of Yale, or the black and orange of Princeton, as Jeems' master leaned towards the pride of New Jersey, or the glery of New Haven The stand that the bye-election would occur beauty in which we take so much pride was when it was ready with a candidate.
