tions (and very cases) of the rough metal timepieces imported from Europe. In that year, however, the art of Ameri can clockmaking was inaugurated by an individual as original in his way as the crude "chroniclers of the flying bonrs" which he turned out. It is the manufacture of these first clocks which it is proposed to commemorate. Eli Terry was the person who may justly be considered the founder of the great ininstry which now forms so large a part of the wealth of Connecticut, and upon which thousands of persons depend for their daily spoon in his mouth. More color might be given to a story alleging that he had made his debut with a jackknife in his hand, for it was to that homely but indispensable instrument that young Terry owed all of his financial success and much of his great-

It was at first intended that the celebra tion at Terryville should be to a great exnot meet with popular favor, and it is reasonably certain that the affair will take the form of a great American clockmakers' exposition, to which all manufacturers in America will be invited to send exhibits, not only of their present output, but as many of their old style timepieces as possi-outside of the trade. It is believed that all Connecticut people will do their utmost to make the exposition a success, inasmuch as, Terryville not being now a clock maturacturing town, there can be no local ealousies on the part of rival cities. Tosides, it is the most appropriate place that could be selected, for it was there that Eli Terry whittled out his first clocks. That he made durable, if crude, timepieces is best evidenced by the fact that one at least is still funning in the hall of the residence of his grandson, the late James Terry, at The little shop, scarcely larger than closet, in which Eli Terry began the manufacture of clocks is still standing in an exrelient state of preservation. It is proposed to make this diminutive factory a feature of the Terryville delabration, and CAL CO., feature of the Terryville celebration, and wrappers. Eli Terry was born in East Windsor, Conn., in May, 1772. From the time he learned to talk he was engaged in making his mother's life miserable by spiriting away the sharp knife which was kept in the kitchen as a potato and apple parer. The disappearance of this knife was always sure to be followed by the appearance of sundry ill formed and only partly rounded wheels which the youthful mechanic carefully concealed under the house.

When he was about eight years old relative gave him a jackknife as a Christmas present, and this may be truly said to have been the beginning of Terry's remarkable career. His rough little wheels

Eli Terry may also be said to have been the first drummer, or commercial traveler, as it is now called, for his business having grown apace, and his new factory having developed a capacity for turning out work far beyond his expectations, he found it necessary to davise some new plan for disposing of his wares. He hit upon the idea of making semiannual trips to the principal trade centers, notifying the dealers in each vicinity sufficiently in advance to enable them to arrange to meet him. In this way he found no trouble in getting orders for more clocks than he could make.
