VIRTUE TRIUMPHANT.

Case of Absent Mindedness in a Typewriter.

"Did you advertise for a typewriter and stenographer, sir?" It was a beautiful girl, with willowy form and clear blue eyes, who asked this question, and a pleasant smile swept across the face of old Jacob Dilworthy as he looked up from his desk and saw the lovely face and graceful figure of the applicant.

It was stern necessity which compelled Gertrude Barrett to go forth into the world to make her own living. Reared in the lap of luxury, the adored child of wealthy parents, she had been suddenly left penniless and fatherless, with the care of a widowed mother on her young shoulders.

There were light hearts in the little Harlem home that night when she told her mother that she had secured the position. "He is wealthy and a widower, dear mother," said the young girl. "Did you not read the story in The Fireside of 'The Pretty Typewriter' or How Clarissa Louise Roe Married a Millionaire. Who knows what the future may have in store for us?" And the young girl laid her blushing face on her mother's shoulder. "I will trust you," said the old lady, in tender, motherly accents, "to make the most of your opportunities."

The days and weeks sped swiftly on, and one night as Gertrude entered the humble cottage she slammed the door with the passionate intensity of a wounded heart.

"What is it, my darling?" cried her mother, as she folded her child in her arms.

"Alas," said the sobbing girl, "I fear that he is getting away from me, and that all the terms of endearment which he has addressed to me during business hours mean absolutely nothing; but I will teach him that even if he is a millionaire he cannot tamper with the simple heart of a trusting typewriter."

"My precious one," murmured her mother, "I have long feared this, but now I see that you are onto him."

"I am," responded Gertrude, fearlessly, "with both feet." From that day the anxious and doting parent noticed a change in her only child. There was a look of determination in her eye that looked ill to the wealthy merchant who had trilled with her young affections. She went about her duties outwardly the same, and Jacob Dilworthy little dreamt of the punishment that was so soon to be meted out to him.

But Gertrude Barrett's hour of triumph came one morning when the gray haired merchant came into his private office with ashy face and trembling limbs, and placing two letters before her demanded in grief stricken accents, "Miss Barrett, what does this mean?"

The first of the letters was as follows: "OFFICE OF HAIRSPRING, WINDER & CO., PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 12, 1888.

"DEAR SIR—Enclosed we hand you your esteemed favor of yesterday, and beg that in all future communications you will confine yourself strictly to the subject in hand. Very truly yours, 'HAIRSPRING, WINDER & CO., 'Per H.'"

The second letter, which was typewritten, was as follows: "OFFICE OF JACOB DILWORTHY, 'NEW YORK, Dec. 11, 1888.

"Messrs. Hairspring, Winder & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

"GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt of your esteemed favor of 10th inst. (how would you like a pair of nine buttoned gloves for those pretty hands, my dear?) and in reply would say that the goods were shipped on the 8th inst. as per invoice (I saw you walking in the park yesterday with a young man; was that the same one who took you to the matinee?) in six (6) parcels. (How would you like to take in the Standard theater with your old bunny to-night?) The balance of order will be shipped to you at the earliest possible date. (Certainly we can dine together. Telegraph your mother that you are detained down town and won't be home till late.) You may look for another shipment the latter part of this week. (You ought to be on the stage yourself, my dear; you look grand in the front row.) Hoping to receive a continuance of your orders, I remain yours, very truly,

"JACOB DILWORTHY." (Wouldn't you like to show up in a new sealskin racquet the day after Christmas?)

[Dictated.] Beautiful, trusting Gertrude did not marry a millionaire like the girl in The Fireside. The old man compromised the matter for cash, and there is joy in the little Harlem home.

There is a new typewriter in Jacob Dilworthy's office, to whom letters are dictated in the presence of witnesses. She secured the position because the clock stopped the moment she appeared in the office.

Thus was virtue triumphant.—New York World.

Holloway's Pills.

No part of the human machine requires more constant supervision than the nervous system, for upon it our health, and even life, depends. These pills strengthen the nerves and are the safest general purifiers of the blood. Nausea, headache, giddiness, numbness, and mental apathy yield to them. They despatch in a summary manner those distressing dyspeptic symptoms, stomachic pains, fulness at the pit of the stomach, abdominal distension, and regulate alike capricious appetites and confined bowels—the commonly accompanying signs of defective or diminished nerve tone. Holloway's Pills are particularly recommended to persons of studious and sedentary habits, who gradually fall into a nervous and irritable state unless some such restorative be occasionally taken.

My Toothache

Is an exclamation heard every hour in the day. Toothache is the most common ailment of young and old, and in the aggregate inflicts more suffering than perhaps any other single complaint. A one minute cure is just what every person desires to possess. Nervin—nerve pain cure—acts almost instantly in relieving the agony, and as a sample bottle affords a quantity sufficient for 100 applications, 10 cents fills the bill. Polson's Nervin is the only positive remedy for toothache and all nerve pains. Sold by N. C. Polson, and all dealers in medicine.

The Particulars Lacking.

A heinous crime is reported to have been committed on the north side of the river on Saturday afternoon. Policemen VanWormer and Witt visited the house on Saturday evening, but the young man whom they wanted had made his escape. The family recently came from Kingston, Ont.

Presence of Mind.

Presence of mind is good in case of accidents and emergencies, and when coupled with Hagedary's yellow oil will often save life. Yellow oil cures all painful injuries, burns, scalds, bruises, frost bites, rheumatic and neuragic pains and is in fact a handy and reliable surgical aid.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

Some New Uses of Ether—The Habit of Either Drinking and Its Fatal Effect.

One or two new uses of ether have lately come into notice. Drs. Henoque and Pradel, of Paris, claim that a tooth may be painlessly extracted by spraying around the external ear with ether. This causes anaesthesia of the trigeminus, which extends to the dental nerves and obviates the necessity of producing a general state of unconsciousness by inhaling gas.

Another use of ether practiced by himself is reported by Dr. Hare, of the Pennsylvania university, in cases where, during anaesthesia (unconsciousness produced by the use of ether or a similar agent,) the breathing suddenly ceases. Dr. Hare has found that in many cases ether freely poured upon the abdomen caused so great a shock by the cold produced by its rapid evaporation as to induce a deep inspiration, which was often followed by the normal respiratory movements. In such cases as these it has been heretofore customary to slap the patient with towels wet in cold water.

But this powerful drug is not always employed for such laudable purposes as those noted above. It is claimed that the destructive habit of ether drinking is making great progress among women.

This chemical product is an ethereal spirit of alcohol, containing that element of alcohol which has the effect of deadening pain. Most people have had opportunities of observing this effect in drunken men, who suffer for so long without feeling them, apparently.

Ether, taken internally, produces a feeling of exaltation, which is not followed by the disagreeable after symptoms arising from over-indulgence in the crude whisky or other spirits. Its results are slower, affecting the mind by slow degrees and depriving the victim of all moral sense. "The confirmed ether drinker," says one authority, "will murder her own grandmother, without so much as a qualm of conscience, to get 50 cents worth of putrid horse manure to put in her favorite toilet. In its effects upon the moral being, ether bears a strong likeness to opium, which might be called a poison for the soul."

Fresh Air as Source of Health.

American women of all classes are, says the Journal of Health, as a rule, sadly ignorant of some of the duties which pertain to health, especially exercise in the open air. The excuse that their many cares oppress them, and that they, in consequence, have but little opportunity for leaving their homes, is scarcely sufficient. The menials who actually cannot enjoy each day an hour's outing, must be small indeed, even among the class forced to work the hardest. Not only do many women fail in this respect in their duty to themselves, but their young children suffer in consequence of the same neglect. From one year's end to another during the winter not a few of them creep their little ones in overheated rooms, if they huddled around the kitchen stove, and the result is we find them, as spring approaches, weak, puny and ailing. In such families colds, coughs, sore throats and the like are common affections. There is scarcely a day during the coldest season when even the baby cannot be safely taken out of doors. Mothers should understand that upon the daily enjoyment of fresh and open air depends, in a great degree, the health of their little ones, as well as themselves; it is, in fact, absolutely indispensable to the well being of all.

One Way of Catching Cold.

"We find in neck wraps a common cause of colds," says a writer on hygiene, and adds, "if, during winter, one were certain to wear such the same wrap at all times when the open air, there would be less danger of cold. But the chances are that on some occasions when it should be worn it would be forgotten either purposely or forgotten, and a cold is the result. The silk handkerchiefs, which many men adorn themselves with, are feet animators, and cause more colds than all other influences. When put on the warmers are wedded to them, and the remainder of the winter. The coat collar is an imperfection when turned up and buttoned closely, and a man is very foolish to use any other means for the purpose."

A Noiseless Clock for the Sick Room.

A recent French invention that will be welcomed by nervous invalids the world over, is a portable clock, the noiseless clock, the principle of which is described as follows. In place of the usual pendulum, the hands are set in motion by the turning of a chain, the end of which is attached to a buoy floating in a tank of liquid. The buoy escapes at a uniform rate, and can be utilized to feed a lamp wick, thus giving the apparatus the double character of clock and lamp. When the lamp is lighted the necessary diminution of the liquid takes place by combustion, at other times by carefully regulated dripping.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

A Little Piece of Rudeness That Probably Comes from Want of Thought.

"People should bow to each other even if they have not been introduced, when one is playing the part of hostess, the other that of guest." So says Mrs. Sherwood, and the hint may serve as a reminder to many who sin in this respect from want of thought rather than through intention. In explanation Mrs. Sherwood continues: At a ball at Delmonico's last winter a young man passed a lady who was receiving and did not bow. "Why were you so rude?" asked the Marquis of the ball. "Because I had never been introduced," was the reply. Now, if ladies take upon themselves the trouble of receiving at a public ball, a club or a charity bazaar, any one who enters should return the graceful courtesy. Anything less is a boorish rudeness. It is to be feared that old-fashioned courtesy has little place in our fashionable society, or in the Nineteenth century.

While there is no fault of manner greater than a too effusive and flattering subservience, yet no citizen loses a particle of his independence by returning the bow of his hostess. "He bows too low," was said of Shakespeare's villain, but "he does not bow at all," even when entering a ballroom or parlor, can be urged against many a modern hero.

Manners and Moods.

Our manners show what we are, and every action and movement made in public is accepted as an index of our character. It therefore behooves us to cultivate kind and refined manners, and the expression of charitable and upright emotions. The very essence of good manners is unselfishness. One has no right to enter society in a gloomy mood. Courtesy requires all who mingle with the world's people to consider others' feelings before their own. The state of one's mind, health or circumstances in life should be avoided as subjects for conversation.

Brief Hints.

Not to indicate good breeding so much as deference to the aged. Guests to their hostess, first, punctuality; second, politeness; then sincere gratitude. Simplicity and purity of language are the characteristics of a well educated and highly cultured person.
