Decision in a Bear Case That Agitated a

Great Many People. Last October Thomas and Benjamin Mills and Peter Jackson, of Wilton, treed a bear that had been creating annoyance in the neighborhood. They poured shot into his hide, but he eluded them and found shelter in the woods. Then Orange Storms and Ross Peters turned up with double-barrelled weapons, and followed the animal into the thicket. They attacked the bear, and were in a fair way of killing him when Benjamin Mills, Jackson, George Babcock, and Frederick Storms joined them. Jackson carried a lantern. They plugged the bear full of buckshot, but before he died he seized George Babcock and hugged him until a dog made the bear let go. After bruin died he was laid away. In the morning he had vanished. Peters and Storms carted the carcase to Kingston and sold it for $25. Then another kind of a fight ensued. Thomas Mills claimed the animal under the hunter's law, having first discovered him and wounded it. At the division court, Odessa, on Thursday, Judge Price heard the case, made all concerned parties to the suit, gave Peters and Storms $2 25 for marketing the beast, and divided the balance, $22.75, between them.

THE LATE GENERAL GORDON.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19. - The Sun's London says the mail from Suakim brings despatches from Gen. Grenfell, among which is the latest, and this time as absolute, authentic account of the last hours of Gen. Gordon. The account, which has been officially declared to be true, is furnished by Demecricy Demetrio Gorgia, a Greek, who was present at the capture and sacking of Khartoum. He says: "I was at Khartoum the night it was taken. The Nile had gone back so that a part of the city was open. Gordon did not construct fresh trenches and ramparts because he thought there were sufficient troops to defend the city. There were 3,000 I think. The gaps and all round about were held by a large force under Farig Pasha That night Farig moved his troops, especially the blacks, from the gap, saying the soldiers were wanted on the other side. Gordon had perfect confidence in Farig. The attack took place at two points. At the largest gap there was no resistance. If the British army, or even a few of them, had arrived one hour before the attack Khartoum would not have been taken and Gordon's troops would have fought to the last. Farig had sent word to the Mahdi: 'Unless you attack to night all is lost.' On that night all was blood and flame. The city had passed over from the command of Gordon to the Mahdi. It was a dreadful night. The air re echoed with horrible shricks, yells, lamentations and wailing, and smelt of blood. I had three friends, Greeks. I hastened to rescue them. I had two Mahdist uniforms given me by an Arab friend. One I gave to one friend, putting on the other myself. It was nearing daybreak when I took my friends to my house. Arabs rushed in, telling me I ought to go to the government house, the seraglio they called it, at once.' I asked 'why?' They replied: 'All the great officers of the Mahdi have gone there to kill Gordon Pasha.' When they saw the third friend had no Mahdist garment on they slew him. We were then taken into the court yard. I saw Gordon Pasha smoking a cigarette on a balcony facing the river. We had entered at the back of the palace, entering the yard where the sycamore tree is. Gorgio Demetrico, of the Soudan and the provinces, and Nicola Lemindata, the Greek consul, were with him. Five bundred Dervishes. who had been sent by the Mahdi with special orders to take Gordon alive, stood at the foot of the staircase. I went up the stairs, being sent by the men below who were vociferating 'Gordon Pasha, Gordon Pasha. Gordon cooly left the balcony. 'Fly,' said the other two, 'while there is yet time. Go in at the little door and take the boat. 'Shall I fly and leave my post,' Gordon replied, indignantly; 'that indeed would be a disgrace.' He then went into the inner room and donned his full uniform and sword. Then he came out and grandly drew himself up to his full height. On his visage was a look of scorn. 'Whom seek ye,' he asked, on gazing at the sea of angry faces. 'Gordon Pasha,' they cried. 'You want him, do you? I am he. Come up hither,' Gordon replied. On being again urged by Demetris and the Greek consul to fly Gordon replied : "For shame ! Would you have me abandon my post ignominously ?" He could easily have escaped at the rear then. As Gordon stood boldly facing the Dervishes several superior Mahdist generals came up. The Dervishes allowed them to pass. They ascended the stairs and asked for the Pasha. Gordon met them saying, "I am he," and handed them his sword in military fashion, intimating that he knew they had taken the place and that consequently he surrendered according to the usages of war. But Massas, one of the generals, snatched hold of his sword, at the same time, in a brutal and most cowardly manner, striking Gordon an unexpected blow. The Pasha would have fought desperately had he thought he would not be treated in an honourable manner. He fell. rolling down the stairs. As he rolled another general speared him on the left side inflicting a dangerous wound. Thus died Gordon. I was there, a spectator to the ghastly deed. I got out of the way when he rolled to the bottom of the stairs. Some say

And All for the Robbery of $400-Who Are the Parties to It.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 19.—At Tiptonville, Tenn., some weeks ago a young man married the daughter of Mrs. J. F. Atcheson, a widow. The young man's father, learning that his son's mother-in law possessed $400, concerted a plan by which he and his son and the young wife were to murder the old lady for the purpose of robbery. The plan was agreed to and the crime committed. The neighbors learned of the crime, fixed the guilt upon the trio, and lynched them.

GAY LIFE IN PARIS.

A Talk of Great Interest to the Young Men by Prof. Waegillivray. Prof. Macgillivray, of Queen's university, addressed - the members of the Y.M.C.A. last evening. He gave an interesting account of his observations in Paris. It is sometimes called the capital of the world or the centre of civilization, and is famous for its prominence in the arts and sciences. Moral refinement and social depravity exist side by side. In some of the latest developments of civilization it falls behind even Kingston. It is not yet lighted by electricity. In the matter of locomotion it is also behind. Railways skirt it but there are no railways within its limits. The large sewer system stands in the way of underground railways, and the elevated railways are unpopular since they would, if built, to a great extent mar the beauty of the city. The buildings and public monuments are magnificent in architectural design. Its parks and squares are charming. The French are gay, witty, frivolous, and plea sure loving. There motto is "Let us drink and be merry, for to morrow we die" Amusements abound. "The Sabbath day is not observed in Paris. It is more like an ordinary holiday in the city, with the exception that services are held in the churches and more work to done. The restaurants are included in the attraction of Paris. From what had been seen of Parisian amusements there can be little home life in their midst. Among the higher classes it is even worse than among the poorer people, as far as home life is concerned. The children are brought up by nurses. Many of them are educated in boarding schools. Girls have the same experience in the matter of education as boys, and it is only after marriage that the women acquire liberty, and then perhaps take more of it than is good for them. The marriage ceremony is not as much respected as itshould be. The divorce court separates those who cannot get along together, and illegal unions led to results most marked in the criminal records of the city. The religion of the day is not effective in restraining the immorality of the people, and a true religion must be had if the city is to be saved from the awful immoral ity that now prevails in it. Such is but s faint idea of the lecture so interesting and so well delivered. Prof. Macgillivray was of their Very Cruel Work. SHAMOKIN, Jan. 19. - While Patrick Doolan and two Hungarian labourers, of Springfield, were on their way home from the mines of the Carbin colliery, they were surrounded by White Caps. Four White Caps appeared, carringy a naked man, whose person resembled a quarter of raw beef. This was caused, so the leader told the miners, by having twenty lashes laid on him. The miners recognized the bleeding man as Thomas Hague, of the coal run, a harmless idiot.

A White Cap said Hague had tried to assault a girl on his way to Shamokin, and was punished therefor. A rope was tied around Hague, and he was cast into the icecold stream and dragged up and down in the water for a short while. Then he was laid on the bank. The band then disappeared in the woods. The miners carried Hague into a hostelry in Springfield, where he now lies at the point of death. The alarm was at once given and bands of angry miners scoured the woods for miles around, but no trace of the brutes could be found.

Several persons in Shamokin received letters yesterday warning them to leave the place within 24 hours or be punished. Everybody is heavily armed and there may be bloodshed. At the time Hague was receiving his brutal treatment a similar scene was being enacted in the forest near Milton, 35 miles away, where two white men and a negro were taken from their cabin by a body of masked men, who tied the captives to trees and lashed them unmercifully.

ANOTHER SCCIETY ROBBED.

A Treasurer Who Misapplied the Funds-

The Action of Bishop Potter. NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—On November 17, Henry P. Marshall, cashier of the Seamens bank for savings, on Wall street, died. For 20 years Mr. Marshall, had also been treasurer of the missionary society for seamen, an association supported by the diocese and having Bishop Potter for its president. He cared for the funds of half a dozen of the largest and richest of Bishop Potter's societies. The missionary society needed money, and applied to the Seamens' bank, which was searched for the society's property, but no money or securities could be found. The funds of the society, entrusted to Mr. Marshall, amounted to over $20,000 at the time of his death. Marshall's estate is valued at about $50,000, and a claim has been filed against it.

The Meaning Put on a Late Election-A General Appeal Wanted.

London, Jan. 19.—The election of Mr. Wilson, the Gladstonian candidate, in the Govan division of Lanarkshire yesterday, to fill the seat in the house of commons made vacant by the death of Sir William Pearce, has caused the greatest rejoicing in the Gladstone party.

The Freeman's Journal, of Dublin, says "The victory is complete, crushing and conclusive. It is a veritable electoral Sedan. The Gladstonians now want only a general election to complete their triumph. Sir John Render, the defeated candidate, left Giasgow for London to-day. A large crowd gathered at the depot to see him off."

The trouble originated from a desire on the part of a certain element to retain the services of U. Grant Houston, who came here two months ago, said he was an evangelist, and desired to preach. He possessed such a fund of information that he captivated the innocent, and they consented to pay him a good salary and give him lodgings in the best families. For a time the interest in the meetings, called revivals, was very great. Houston had a highly coloured map of the universe of heaven, and of that other region where the wicked are supposed to live a life of perpetual torment. All these things he would explain and occasionally diversify matters by telling stories and singing songs.

Not long ago it began to dawn upon some that they were being imposed upon, and the more they talked the matter over the greater was their belief that the so-called evangelist was a fraud. Matters came to a focus the other night when Houston took his place in the pulpit and commenced his sermon. He had barely begun when there was a perfect fusillade of stones, billets of wood, pieces of turf, old bottles, shoes, rubbers and boots. They were pelted at him from every quarter, and he found safety by hiding under the pulpit.

Finally, however, he mustered up courage and shouted to a number of his followers to aid in holding the fort, as the White Caps were upon them. Then he rushed for a window in order to escape, but the mob outside had all the points of escape well guarded, and he was quickly seized. The gospel dispenser was lifted over the heads of a mob, and, after a thorough drubbing was fired through the open doorway.

Many people inside, ignorant of what was on the tapis, were frightened nearly out of their senses. Several women fainted. When the smoke of battle had finally cleared away matters were adjusted and service under the leadership of the fussy little superintendent was carried out in the old time religious style. Outside, a far different scene was being enacted. Men and boys with drums, horns and tin pans paraded the streets, and awe inspiring transparencies, bearing rough drawings of skull and crossbones, coffins, graveyards and skeletons, and such mettoes as "Go, you scalawag," "Not all dead," "Our opinion," "Imposter and intruder," "The fraud must go," "We've had enough," "Rats," passed up and down the one street of the place and made the night hideous till long after midnight. Matters were not allowed to end there, however, for the next morning the longhaired preacher swore out writs for the arrest of a number of the ringleaders, whom he had recognized, and to day they appeared in the courtroom for trial. The little building was crowded with hundreds of interested spectators. But in one respect they were disappointed, for the plaintiff, by the advice of his attorney, kept discreetly away, as a rumour to the effect that a coat of tar and feathers was awaiting his appearance had come to his hearing, and he had quietly left town.
