Bardolph Kiljordan stood before her as erect, imperious, and gloomy as the star actor of a broken and dismembered dramatic combination standing on one side of the track half way between stations and watching a handcar propelled by section men sweeping rapidly past and disappearing in the hazy distance.

Mr. Kiljordan burned with the indignation of an abused, insulted man. "For months and months," he said, "you have encouraged me, You have smiled upon me. You have accepted my attentions. You have listened to me with apparent approval when I have ventured to hint at a feeling stronger than friendship"-

"Mr. Kiljordan," interposed the young lady. "I will not deny that your attentions have been agreeable to me."

"Then why, Vinnie," he exclaimed, imploringly, "why do you tell me it can never be: Why do you look at me coldly and say we were not meant for each other?" "I would have saved you this pain if I could, Mr. Kiljórdan. I have waited and waited, hoping that the barrier between us might disappear-that you wouldwould see what it is that interposes so "It is impossible, Mr. Kiljordan," replied the young lady, firmly yet kindly. "I shall always entertain the highest esteem for you as a man, a citizen, a friend, and an excellent judge"-here her voice faltered-"of post-theatrical refreshments, but any closer relationship, I am now convinced, can never be thought of."

"Vinnie Garpickle!" he exclaimed, with bitterness, "so be it! I shall not go down on my knees. It would do no good. The carpet, besides"-and the young manlooked at it dejectedly—"if you will excuse me for saying so, Miss Garpielde, is not in that condition of ah-of tidiness that-er-

"Perhaps, Mr. Kiljordan," suggested the young lady, freezingly, "you will put an end to this painful scene by-"Going? Certainly, Miss Garpickle, certainly. But I think I have the right to ask you, since this will probably be the last time I shall ever have the opportunity. What the nature of the barrier is that separates us. Have I not?" "You have, sir."

A TRIP THROUGH SPACE.

It Would Take Us Fifty Years to Make a

Visit to a Next Door Neighbor. Let us for a moment suppose certain railways to be built, one round the world in a perfect circle, others to various points in the solar system. And we will further suppose that the trains on these railways could be kept going at the rate of sixty miles an hour for any required length of time, that their passengers could do without food or could be supplied with an abundance of it; that the bodies of such passengers could be made capable of enduring the various changes of air, temperature and other climatic con ditions to which they would be exposed. -

And on our world this kind of travel would be comparatively easy, and would take next to no time. In twenty-four hours the passenger could travel 1,440 miles, or considerably farther than from New York to Chicago. In forty-eight hours he could travel as far as from Boston to Liverpool, and in less than seventeen days he could go round the world. But as regards the journeys in space, a difficulty in most cases insuperable would stand in the way In order to-visit any but a very few of the nearest bodies in space, the travelers on our celestial railways would need to have their lives very greatly prolonged.

Wer- they, to set out for any distant part of the system they all would die before they had fairly begun their journey. A voyage to the moon, to Venus or to Mars would, under the above conditions, be possible, to any other body in the system it would be impossible.

The journey to the moon would be comparatively short. Our companion is distant about 240,000 miles, or, in round numbers, its distance contains ten times as many miles as are contained in the earth's circum ference. Traveling at the rate of sixty miles an hour, and never stopping, it would take between 166 and 167 days to reach the journey's end. Compared with other heav enly distances, this is a mere nothing, but compared with the distances actually traversed by the average man, it is very great indeed

Few ever travel at sixty miles an hour, and then only for short periods, and at consider able intervals. Many, probably the major ity, of those who live to a good old age cover less than 240,000 miles during their whole lives. A great traveler might do it in say. fifteen years. For even a conductor or eagineer of an express train it would require

Let us now take a strip to the planet Veaus_our next nearest neighbor. This will be a much more formidable undertaking We have seen that a saccession of the long est journeys over this earth would form but short and passing episodes in a lifetime. We have seen that, on one of our imaginary rail ways, the traveler could circle the world in less than three weeks. We have seen, not only that a journey to the moon is quite pas sible to the passengers by our celestial rail way, but that equal and even greater distauces are often traveled on earth.

But a trip to Venus would be a very dif ferent matter Venus, as you may know i about 26,000,000 tilles away, or, at sixty miles an hour, without stopping, she is dis tant a journey not of three weeks or six months, but of some fifty years. On the imaginary railway such a journey would be possible, for a great many persons line longer than fifty years. But in real life no one ever has traveled, and no one ever will travel, anything like so far No human being ever has traveled 5,000,000 miles, and it is safe to say that no one ever will To complete this measure of journeying would require an average of 100,000 miles a year for fifty years. Some few, pro- 5, in all their lives may have traveled 1,630 - 55 miles, but these are probably rare exc. So we see that no one ever has fived where the traveled more than a small part of the . . . tance to Venus. Yet, compared with o bodies in the system, this star may be to be almost a next door neighbor -

A Gathering of Great Interest to the Farmers-Happy Addresses. NAPANEE, Ont., Jan 19 -- The most suc cessful series of meetings held by the Lennox Farmers' institute, took place in the town hall on Thursday. There was a very good attendance. In the morning papers were read by Mr. Nicol on overcropping and the folly of it, and by A. Pringle on silage, ensilage, and silos. After the former there was quite an animated discussion, the farmers present entering fully into the debate. Prof. Grenside delivered an address on hereditary diseases of the horse, which called forth considerable discussion. Rotation of crops, by Mr. Nicol, was also listened to with much interest, as also an address by Mr. Grenside on horse breeding in Ontario. The evening session was well attended. Mr Nicol's advice to young farmers was received with much acceptance. Among other things he advised a thorough scientific education, such as was obtainable at the Ontario agricultural college. Prof. Grenside followed with an address on disease germs, which proved quite interesting. There were also music and short addresses by local
