The Hieroglyphics of the Professional Traveler Look Like Those on an Egyptian Sarcophagus—The Story of a Tramp Who Sniveled to Some Advantage.

- A special to The New York Sun from Ogden, Utah, says:

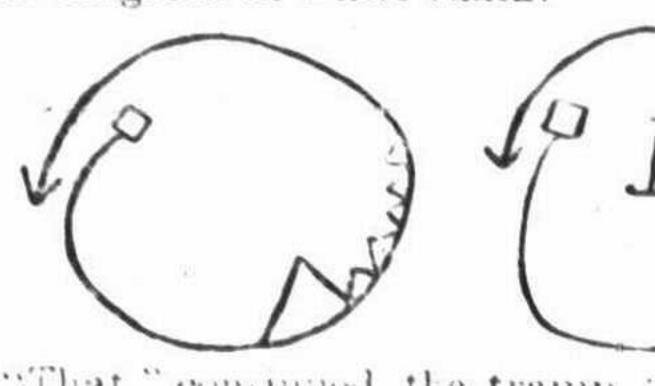

The train men on some of the overland roads have known for a long time that the tramps who make it a point to beat their way from Omaha or Kansas City to the coast have had a mysterious form of telegraphy, but it is believed that no one man has ever obtained a complete key to the system. While it is common enough for a conductor or a brakeman to discover the meaning of one or more marks in a specific case, the most critical observer has yet to find the man who has solved the sign language with sufficient accuracy to apply his, knowledge to all the hieroglyphics which might come under his

A few evenings ago, as the overland train from the west pulled in, a tramp stood on the platform watching the trunks that were being thrown off. Presently he turned to a man who was near at hand and said: "I see that Limpy Barker is on his way

The person addressed manifested a curiosity to know who Limpy Barker was, and how the other was aware that he was on his travels. "Limpy," answered the tramp, "is an old timer on this route. I know that he is a-coming by his mark. Do you see this here

The bystander advanced toward the trunk designated and saw on the smooth end of it this diagram in white chalk:

"That," communed the tramp, "is Barker's mark, and I'd know it in Guatemala. It means that he is coming east, and having a very rough time of it; in other words, that he's bumping it. It means, furthermore that he has found no place better than the one that he started from. The square signifies that. The zigzag lines on the right of the circle mean that he is walking, and that in other ways he is getting the worst of it. I know that he is coming east by the turn of the circle. If it had turned to the right it would have meant that he was going west "

Then he said that the trunk was probably marked by the trump at its starting place. Barker had seen it in a baggage wagon or on the depot platform, and wishing to notify such of the boys along the line as might see it how he was getting on he put the mark on it and trusted the rest to luck. When the bystander had thought of these things a minute or two he turned to the tramp and asked him what marks he would make on a trunk or a box car going west if he knew to a certainty that his friend Barker would see them.

and then answered: "I'm well fixed. I have some money. I know where I can get all the whisky I want. I stand in at a place where grub can be had on tick. I'm not at all particular about moving on, but if I should start out I'd as soon go east as west. Limpy is a good fellow, and if I could be certain that he would see it inside of forty-eight hours I would mark on

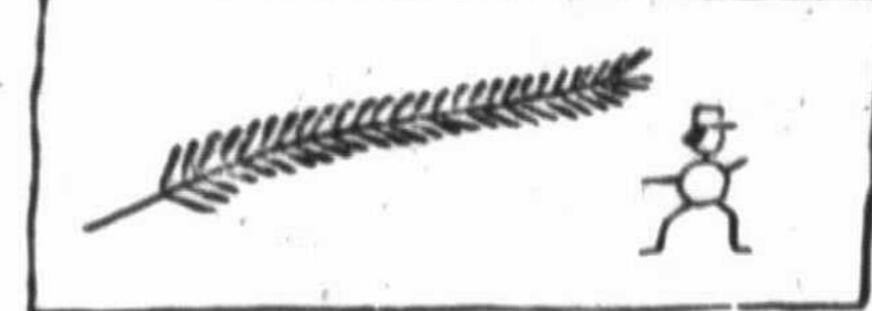

"He would know what it meant in a minute, and I'll bet the drinks that he would be here as soon as he could cover the distance. That's my mark down in the right hand corner. He would know it, but a good many of the boys who could read all the rest of it wouldn't know that. You will see, though, that that would make no difference. I can read them all, and I can tell nine times out of ten where the man was when he made the mark. Most of these marks amount to nothing, and are put on for fun. There are marks, however, that mean business, and we look for them very closely when we are on the tramp."

A freight conductor says that an apparently in ignificant mark can make plenty of trouble for an official such as he. He said:

"A few weeks ago, when I was on my run, I found a tramp on top of the train, and was about to put him off when something in his appearance touched me, and having given him an opportunity to beg I did not again muster up enough nerve to bounce him, as I should have done. After that I never saw so many tramps in all my life. They seemed to rise right out of the ground. Every time we stopped three or four would get on, and when at last I stopped the train, with the intention of cleaning them all out, I found that they outnumbered the train hands about five to one, and that diplomacy would be much more becoming in me than force.

"It occurred to me at length that the sniveling cuss whom I had dealt with at first had had something to do with the irruption, and I told him in the presence of the entire crowd that I would carry them to the next station, about fifteen miles, if he would explain how it was that so many tramps had boarded my train with so much confidence. At first he was unwilling to speak, but, encouraged by the others, he finally took me to and pointed to the side near the top where, in chalk, I saw this:

"No amount of entreaty would persuade him to decipher it, and we started up again with the understanding that the entire crowd was to skip at the next station. Just before we came to a standstill one of the tramps sidled up to me and said:

"Say, mister, do ye know what feathers is? The last time I ever slept on em they was soft. That writin' means 'soft man,' and that there tearful chap put it on the car and we see it. Savey? "I grabbed a side bar and made for the first tramp, with the intention of hurting him, but he was too lively and he got away. I have seen plenty of tramp writing, but that is the only sample that I ever had translated

SOME PHENOMENAL "FAITH CURES."

Mrs. Maria Woodworth, of Springfield, Ills.,

Claims to Perform Miraculous Healings. The blind, the deaf and dumb, the lame spectacle (which recalls to the mind a graphic description in "Ben Hur") is afforded in Springfield's streets of the maimed and sick creeping along on crutches, or being carried in beds or chairs to an old deserted mill loft, where, it is claimed, some of the most marvelous faith cures on record have of late taken place. The faith cure meetings are conducted by a woman named Maria Woodworth: She is six feet in height, extremely angular and weird looking, and is said

MARIA WOODWORTH. to resemble a "Macbeth" witch. Her power is said to be miraculous. People who have been afflicted with deafness all their lives are said to have been cured at a single meeting.

The most advanced and seemingly incurable diseases are said to have been healed in an hour. Cripples have thrown away crutches, the blind have been restored to sight, the dumb have broken forth into not been completely squelched by the subject's absolute belief in the efficacy of the faith cure.

Among others seeking "the power" the other night were three little girls, aged 9, 11 jand 13 years respectively. It is scarcely conceivable that at such tender ages they have acquired the by no means simple art of artistically lying. But the story of their experiences is pretty diaphanous. It is said that after praying for some time these three little ones became suddenly rigid, with a stiff sort of trembling in the hands and feet. After wandering around through the crowd they "came to," and each related a story of strange things seen during their trances. Each had seen the other two, had beheld a heavenly city paved with gold, had looked upon people in torm at in another region, who were surrounded by flames of fire and by serpents writhing and hissing in agony.

One of these little girls, Ida Anderson, was more highly favored than her companions in trance. She is the daughter of a respectable tailor of Springfield, and had lost several little sisters some time ago, whom she saw during her trance and with them played peek-aboo, dodging behind the pillars that support the ceiling and laughing as children do in their sports.

Here is a case which created considerable excitement in Springfield, and put a man named Watts in a rather embarrassing posi-

The day before Christmas a young lady went into a trance at 3 o'clock p. m. and remained in that state until 8:15 the next morning. On Christmas night she was again overpowered. While Joseph Russel, well known in Springfield, was kneeling at the altar with this young lady he was stricken by "the power," but "earlie to" in a much better spiritual condition. The young lady arose MEN'S HEAVY UNDERWEAR and walked around, and in her path stood Watts. She took him by the hand and, to The tramp was thoughtful for a minute | his utter astonishment, he could not get loose. She tried to talk, but could not, and as she made signs as though she wanted to write, a pencil and paper were given her, by which she wrote warnings, evidently addressed to Watts.

> Though her writing was hardly legible, enough was deciphered to learn that this was his last chance to be saved. This occurred about 4 o'clock p. m., and she stood up holding him by the hand until 11:35 p. m., when she let go of her own accord and he went away. Just before letting go ber hold upon him she lay down and went into a trance, in which she remained until 12 o'clock the next Springfield is much shaken up over these stories, the believers and the scoffers being pretty evenly divided.
