WITH THE FOREIGNERS.

THE CUSTOMS OF SOME PLOPLE IN THE MISSION LANDS.

Very Cleverly Pourtrayed in the City Hall Last Night-An Entertainment of Rare Merit-Characters Presented in a Very Interesting Manner,

It is seldom that the citizens of Kingston are afforded an opportunity to listen to such a pleasing and instructive entertainment as that which was given in the city hall last evening under the auspices of the Olive Branch mission band. There was a large audience present, notwithstanding the unfavourable weather which prevailed before the proceedings began.

The platform was screened from the auditors by large flags, over which was an arch of gas jets, shining through variously coloured globes. The entrance to the stage was beautifully decorated with long streamers of bunting neatly arranged on the rear walls.

Rev. Mr. Mackie, pastor of St. Andrew's congregation, presided, and briefly stated what the objects of the Olive Branch mission band were. He said the branch was simply a juvenile missionary association, which assisted in connection with the Women's foreign missionery society of the three Presbyterian churches in the city. When he first became acquainted with the branch there were only three or four children in it, out it has of late grown remarkably strong and now numbers about 100 members. They are instructed weekly with regard to the work in mission fields in different parts of the world, and are trained to do something in connection with these missions. They have held sales, the proceeds of which have been sent to foreign lands for the purpose of assisting in the civilization of the people in these countries. The members have lately been studying the manners and customs of foreign lands, and those who will take part in the programme would imitate these manners and customs, and wear costumes similar to those worn in countries which they would represent. He would be the only Canadian on the platform during the evening. The pianist of the evening would be a German, Miss Fraulien Monroe.

When the curtain was drawn Miss Munroe appeared and played a very difficult selection entitled "The Star." The choir, consisting of well-trained voices, sang behind the scenes the hymn, "Make me a worker for Jesus."

Miss A. Harold, suitably arrayed in the standard of England, represented Miss Canada. She preceded the introduction of the natives of foreign lands, and sang capably "God Save the Queen.

The pages were Louis Thornton, Bertie Baird, R. Houston and H. Dunn. They acted their parts cleverly, and introduced the representatives of the different countries to Miss Canada, who questioned them carefully as to their condition with reference to temporal and religious matters. They gave very interesting accounts of the lands they represented, and told of the modes of living and customs practiced by the natives. Their costumes were appropriate, being correctly conceived. The foreigners came on the platform in the following order :

North-West -Messrs. McDouald and Ross; Misses J. Miller and E. Harold. Trinidad-Mr. McClimren and Misses Thompson and Maggie Houston,

India-Mr. Potter and Misses Maggie Allen, Mabel Boyd and Maggie Henderson. Miss Mabel Boyd recited, in a very pleasing manner, "The Hindoo Girl."

China-Messrs. T. B. Scott and J. F. Scott; Misses Potter, J. Marshall and Gertie Hardy, While the Cninese were being presented Miss Georgie Andrews rendered "Millions Die in China Without God," This piece was very effectively delivered.

New Hebrides-Mr. Kellock; Misses Alice Campbell, Annie McBride and Ethel Africa-R. Houston, P. Nash, McMahon and Martin.

Egypt - Mr. Raymond; Misses J. Jampbell and Aggie Connors.

Palestine - Mr. Menzies.

Greenland-Miss A. Hudgins. Miss Gertie Harold sang "Far, Far Away," and Miss Maggie Henderson read a piece entitled, "The Missionary Box."

Prof. Marshall and Misses McCormack, M. Harold and M. Allen represented Japan. Mr. Marshall was dressed in a costume similar to that worn by a Samari, a member of a very distinguished class in Japan. He carried two swords like those worn by the people he represented. He said that the classes under a Samari were farmers, ar tisans, merchants and coolies. The Samaris walked about the country in a very haughty style. They deliberately cut down with their swords persons beneath them in rank who gave them offence. The act of kicking their swords accidentally or purposely nerited death for the offenders. His account of the custo ns of the Samaris was listened to with a great deal of interest. With the assistance of the ladies acting the part of Japanese with him he showed how the Japanese ladies were entertained while in company. At the close of the proceedings he bade the audience good night after the manner of the Japanese.

The programme was closed with a solo sung in excellent voice by Mr. F. Strange, and tableaux, admirably presented, entitled "Indian School," "Indians of the North-"Yest," and "A Gypsy Camp."

The entertainment was first class in every particular, and the promoters of it are deserving of great credit for its success. They evidently spared no pains or expense in get ting it up.

AWARDING THE SEATS.

A Committee Engaged in Adjusting Matters in Sydenham Street Church.

Yesterday the seats in the Sydenham astreet Methodist church were allocated. The committee burdened with this work had a lively time of it, and were kept busy until a very late hour. The sittings range from $2.50 to $3 each. The principle laid down by the committee was the recognition of proprietory rights in seats near to the place where they were located in the old church. This wiped out a lot of difficulty at once. The balance of the seats were then awarded, though the claims of various people after certain seats will have to be decidlater. There are about twenty five or thirty seats on the ground floor yet untaken. Few of those who formerly were on the ground floor have gone to the gallery. Quite a number of chairs, however, have been secured.

A Victorious Paper. The actions for libel have failed in nearly all directions of late. The last rebuff is in London, where judges and juries are very severe on papers. In the queen's bench, London, January 30th, Mee, Billings & Co. sued the Standard for alleged libel for having published a letter stating that they were raising a loan of £75,000 for the Ottago dock trust on false pretences and worthless securities. The jury returned a verdict for the Standard, with costs, the judge remarking that if the verdict had been for the plaintiffs there would have been an end to all fair criticism on similar undertakings. The judge refused to stay execution.

A GOOD MAN'S END.

The Funeral of the Late Mr. Carruthers-

Affection of the People. The funeral obsequies of the late John Carruthers occurred yesterday afternoon in the midst of a desperate snow storm. The wind blew strongly from the north east, driving the snow in great white clouds about the hundreds who crowded the streets adjacent to the residence, It was such a storm as few desired to face, and yet the oldest and most respected of Kingston's citizens felt it imperative to brave the rigors of the climate and show the respect and esteem they had for one who had done so much for the city.

The remains of the deceased gentleman, attired in black, reposed in a beautiful casket in the southern drawing room of "Annandale," his palatial residence on the corner of Sydenham and Earl streets. Many friends, old and tried ones, as well as those of later years, called and viewed the face, now cold in death, then sadly turned away. Not a few referred affectingly to his many virtues. The face was very natural, there being no trace of sadness upon it. It was as full as when he walked about the streets. The snow-white beard and hair alone gave evidence that a septenarian had passed away. The coffin was heaped with flowers, the memorials of friends to testify that friendships, though severed on earth, were not gone forever.

The halls and drawing room were filled with citizens when Rev. M. Macgillivray read appropriate passages of scripture suitable for the general public and the bereaved. Rev. Principal Grant then delivered a brief address. He said: "We are face to face with the most solemn fact or scene that the world contains. The death of a child awes us; how much more the death of a father, the father of a community. The late Mr. Carruthers was that. He deserved that title more than any one else. The best citizens that are left will each say that Kingston has lost her best and truest citizen." Then he dwelt upon the excellent qualities of the deceased, his love of everything that bore upon the life of the community; his love of learning-characteristic of Scotchmen-and his love of liberty. He loved liberty because he had faith in man, especially in man's mind. He did not believe in the cramping or muzzling of the mind. He believed, therefore, in truth and progress and in the future. The principal next referred to the love possessed by deceased for brother man, to the good he had done the community, and to the love he had for God. Mr. Carruthers did not speak much about his religious feelings. They were too deep, too sacred to be talked about lightly or to any one unless those in whom he trusted. "Our loss," were the words in conclusion, "is his gain. It will be our gain also, if we imitate his excellencies and take into our characters that which was noblest in him." The principal offered a brief consolatory prayer, which brought the service to a close. A short space of time was allowed for many to view the remains.

Punctually at 2:30 o'clock-punctuality was a characteristic of the deceased—the following relatives advanced to the coffin: Messrs. J. B. Carruthers, Major Short, A. Gunn, J. Gunn, R. V. Matthews and Rev. M. W. Maclean, and silently conveyed it to the hearse, standing outside the gate. At once the cortege started for the city of the dead. The great company of clergymen, professional and military men, citizens and students that followed in processional order was the best proof of the respect in which the late lamented citizen was held. The police force, in uniform, headed the procession, and led the way to Gordon street, where the procession was broken up and a great many citizens and friends took sleighs for the cemetery. The unanimous expression was that a noble man had gone to

The funeral was a most fitting one. Everything that tended to ostentation and display was markedly absent. Mr. Carruthers was a plain man. He despised flum mery, and his family honored him in having a quiet funeral without parade and show. Even the customery display of crape was absent. The example thus set is worthy of imitation.

A POINT IN LAW.

Can a Dealer in Iron Buy Without Registering the Purchases. Barney, who keeps a second hand store on Princess street, is also a dealer in old iron. He purchased the most of the iron grate bars stolen recently from Capt. Donnelly, sr. This morning he was charged at the court with having failed to register the names of the parties who sold the iron to him or make an entry, indicating that he had purchased the iron. Mr. McIntyre appeared for the defendant and contended that his client in buying iron was not amenable to the law governing junk and second-hand stores. He defined that iron could neither be classed as junk nor second-hand goods, and therefore, dealers in them were not governed by their license when they purchased old iron. The case was adjourned in order to get the city solicitor's opinion in the matter.

PENITENTIARY REFORMS.

A Bill May Be Presented in Regard to Them in Parliament.

The report of the minister of justice declares that there are now 1,094 convicts in the dominion penitentiaries. Mr. Moylan, the inspector of penitentiaries, says in the course of his review of the year's business : "The prospect of introducing a reform in our penitentiary system is, I hope, soon to be realized. I refer to the isolation of cellu lar confinement of incorrigible and habitual and also newly received convicts. The experiment will be tried at Kingston, where it was intended to build a block of cells suitable for the purpose next spring." Concerning the re entry of convicts into society Mr. Moylan says : "The criminal ought to reenter society only when he has given guarantees of safety by his good conduct and industry in the prison, and not at the end of the term fixed in advance by the law, as is the case in our present system, which makes punishment its sole aim. In a better system, which raises the penitentiary question to the rank of a science, each person should be studied individually, and treated according to his character and according to the degree of moral idiocy with which he is affected. I regard the indeterminate sentence system as most essential to any plan of reform that may be devised. This system has no minimum or maximum term of sentence. It is somewhat like the ticket ofleave system adopted in England. In the intermediate system in its complete form a prisoner would be kept in prison until those in charge of him were satisfied that he was fit again to become a member of society.' These observations toreshadow the bill relating to sentences which the government will shortly bring down.

CARRIED THE BY-LAW.

The Electors of South Elmsley Were Alive to Their Own Interests.

The by law granting $4,000 to the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa railway was carried in the township of South Elmsley yesterday by a majority of 113 to 10. It required a majority of 78 to give legal force to the by-law, and this was more than obtained. The day was very disagreeable and at one time it looked as though the vote would not be secured, but it was, however. Ald. Gildersleeve worked energetically all day. There were only two polling places. On March 2nd the ratepayers of South Crosby will give their verdict on a by-law granting $10,000, and on March 16th a bylaw for $20,000 will be voted upon in the township of rear of Leeds and Lansdowne.

A Fine Kettle of Fish.

There is trouble about the representatives sent by the township of Camden to the council of Lennox and Addington. For two years four members were sent, but a calculation shows that there is not a sufficient number of ratepayers in the municipality to warrant such a representation. There should be for such 1,500 electors, whereas there are only 1,450. It is held that Mr. Hinch, of Camden East, third deputy clerk, is irregularly elected, and he will be asked to refund to the county the money he drew for attending the January session of the county council. The Napanee Express, further says: "As Warden Filson was elected by the vote, of Mr. Hinch, who really had no right to vote, he may be asked to step down and out. Perhaps he will resign, however, rather than have trouble over the matter.

THE GLITTERING DUST.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE GOLD CRAZE IN NORTH HASTINGS.

Turnkey Marsh Was a Member of Captain Foxton's Company and Relates Many Interesting Incidents.

Belleville Ontario,

The gold excitement in the spring of 1867 was a memorable event in the history of the county, and will never be forgotten, at least by those who were financially ruined in their greed for wealth. In conversation with John Marsh, turnkey, at the gaol, he told many incidents connected with those stirring times that will interest the public now.

"The excitement was so great," he said,

'that the government found it necessary to send a company of volunteers to North Hastings to preserve peace. I was a member of the company and witnessed many exciting events. Chief Foxton, of the Kingston regulars, was in charge of the twentyfour stalwart men. Sergeants Joseph Kinlap, Madoc, and Alex. Stewart, who is now keeping hotel in the limestone city, were the other officers. Among the privates were John Abraham, Kingston; Robert Menzie, Belleville ; William Bowen, Frankford ; McCallum, Ebemity, Smith and Spick, all of Kingston. Foxton brought nearly all of his men with him. We were drilled in the old armoury here for several days, and were then supplied with our accoutrements, saddles, swords and revolvers. Each man had to furnish his own horse. We left Relleville on the 23rd April, 1867. The whole place was at fever heat then. "We were stationed at Madoc, although the principal mine was at El Dorado, and it was as tough a mining camp as British Columbia or California ever saw. It was called then, as it is now, the Richardson mine. Fights occurred almost every hour and I can tell you the company was never idle. I will never forget one day when a messenger rode up to our camp in great haste without a coat and told the captain he was wanted at El Dorado, where a gang of men had started a big row because the mine had been shut down. Foxton mustered his braves and we started post haste for the scene of action. We rode at full speed, and had not gone far when Menzie's horse burst a blood vessel and died on the road side. He quickly dismounted, sprang over a fence, and taking a farmer's horse from the plough was soon in his saddle again. It was less than an hour from the time we got the word until we were at the mime. We met the mob coming back, about three hundred strong. Bob Menzie, Kenlock, Speck, and myself were or lered to remain there on guard for a few days.

"The mine was about exhausted, the speculators thought, and was shut down before outsiders got hold of the fact. This annoyed the miners, for they were well aware that on the success of the Richardson mine depended the whole North Hastings mineral deposit. In a week or so, however, they became reconciled, and the company was despatched on a reconnoitering tour through Bannockburn and out towards Georgian Bay. We found every farmer and squatter out with a pick axe and shovel in search of the glittering dust. Every few rods you would find big holes and the powder blasts could be heard all over the country. Such excitement!

"The company with the crusher always gave out a highly colored account of the richness of the ore, and this kindled the fire of excitement daily. When we returned to Madoc one half of the company received orders to go to Quebec, where there was a similar trouble. I remember a desperate fight one day in which I took a hand. It was at the time of an election, and all the miners and shantymen came in to see the fun. A giant in strength named Brooks soon kicked up a row. McCallum attempted to arrest him, and called on me for assistance. I took charge of him while "Mac" went to the barracks after Foxton. Blows were freely exchanged between us, and one minute I would be down and then Brooks. By the time Foxton arrived our clothes were torn in shreds. The captain was a powerful fellow and soon landed his man in the barracks. That fight created the wildest excitement. The streets were lined with a boisterous mob yelling and shouting.

"Half a dozen stage lines between Belle ville and Madoc reaped a harvest in those days. They drove real old fashioned California stages, or tally hos, with leather springs. Four horses were required to draw the load, and the rig was not only filled with passengers, but they clung to the outside like eel flies. Luke's was the half way house, where the horses were changed. One driver I remember well. They called him "Scotty." He could make his two trips a day, but of course his horses were always on the gallop. Foxton was a decent fellow. We all liked him. He did his duty fearlessly, and was every inch a soldier.'
