A SOCIETY DRAMA.

The Count Falls Into a Trap and Gets

"So, count, you desire to marry my

These words came from the lips of Reginald de Montmorency, the millionaire banker, as he stood in the sumptuously furnished parlor of his mansion on G street, facing a distinguished gentle-man of foreign appearance. The latter fervently replied:

"Yes, yes, I do!" "I'll let you know my decision to-morrow. By the way, count, my daughter and I have arranged for a little supper at Ormsby's cafe this evening. Will you join us?"

"With pleasure."

Hotel

Gladys de Montmorency reclined on an excellently upholstered ottoman, in a boudoir, the furnishing of which must have cost a good deal of money.

There was a far away look in her eye; there was a far away look in her other

She was thinking of one who was dearer to her than life. She was thinking of the splendid Count Bologni, with his lustrous Italian eyes, and of the excellent chewing gum he had given her. She was summoned to the library, where her father, the opulent banker, stroked her silken hair and said:

"Gladys, the count has asked for your "That's business, father; there are no flies on the count." "Are you sure, my daughter, that he is your kind of people?" "Dead sure.

"Because, my child," and his voice grew tremulous with emotion, "because I fear me much that he is not a count at all. Methinks that when I was erstwhile at Omaha, I saw him as a waiter in a restaurant. My child, O my child! These gray hairs would indeed go in sorrow to the grave-this old heart would be rended in twain if I were to see you in the soup!" The lovely girl's breath came in gasps;

neck, and whispered: "What are we going to do about it?" "Hearken," her father replied; "I have a scheme-number 207, series D. We'll take supper with him this evening, and I'll put him to a crucial test. Until then let us abide in peace. Kiss me again, my angelic child."

she twined her beautiful arms about his Myriads of lights were gleaming in Ormsby's magnificent cafe when Mr. de Montmorency entered, with Glayds on his arm, queenly in her beauty and

The count was already there, and the three sat down to a table together.

"What ho, waiter! Come hither!" This stern command from Mr. de Montmorency was instantly obeyed. The waiter came to the table.

ered, and the cold perspiration was on his brow, as he said:

"Count, my daughter and I only care for a steak and a cup of coffee. Will you order for us?"

The count rose from his chair, and his ringing voice could be heard throughout the vast room as he said: "Slaughter in the pan and draw one in the dark twice."

Reader, there is but little more to add. Crushed and broken, Gladys retired to a convent to end her life in quiet and soli-

The Empress of Russia is gradually recovering from the shock to her mind and nerves caused by the Boski disaster. She begins to go to balls and appear in public.

A Forcible Fact.

Constipation is the most frequent cause of headaches, bad blood, humors, dizziness, vertigo, etc., and because of this should never be allowed to exist. It may be readily cured by using Burdock Blood Bitters, which never fails to cure even the most obstinate and chronic cases.

An Apt Quotation

From a letter by Mrs. Sullivan, 124 West Ave., Hamilton, says: "After trying a number of medicines for liver complaint, from which I suffered for years, I bought two bottles of Burdock, Blood Bitters and found it a complete cure. My house is never without it."
