NATURE'S SCHOOL OF ART.

Lessons to be Learned in Observing How She Blends Her Colors.

Nature is very sparing of showy contrasts of warm and cold colors. Red and blue are very rare, and of yellow and blue the cases are but few, and black and blue are found in lepidoptera more often than white and blue are seen in our flora or fauna. It is not uncommon for one of two strong colors to be overcast with a tinge of its fellow, or for both of them to be reconciled by a common touch of black or of some third color, or for one of them to be lightened by a dash of white, while the other is lowered by as much black, and so red, off hued with black—russet and green upbrighted with white—often meet in the autumn in dead and dying patches of fading leaves. It may be shown, I believe, by the refractions of light in crystallized gypsum that brown is the complementary color to lavender gray; and how true to herself is nature we may go forth and see, in the fall of year, in the dead and curled leaves of the mugwort, or meadow sweet, which are beautiful even in their death, with one side brown and the other the brown matching gray; and, if brambles be cut in the leaf green season, their two surfaces soon wither into the harmony of gray and green.

And what use are we to make of these hues of nature? They are warrants for a gray mantle under locks of brown hair, or a brown bonnet or trimmings, or a gray room wall with brown furniture; and if in a hot summer's day I see the dark leaf shades playing on the gray bark of a young beech, I can boldly lay darkish leaf shades on a wall of the beech bark's hue; or if, after the winter rains, I find a barkless pole in railings, tinted with the palest blue gray, and on breaking off a splinter of it I find its inner wood of its true color of pale brown yellow, why should I not take the inner tint for my wall and the outer one for the skirting? Or if I pick up a piece of lichen of dull green on one side and dull gray on the other, why should I not bind my book in one color and lay on it a lettering piece of the other? Nature is the best school of art, and of schools of art among men those are the best that are nature's best interpreters.—W. Barnes in The Architect, London.

Irish Origins and Character.

Putting minor divisions aside, and keeping in mind the two grand divisions among the old Irish, namely, the imaginative, persistent, stolid, revengeful, superstitious Ugrian, and the quick tempered but kind hearted, generous, unsteady, quick tongued, pleasure loving Kelt, we can understand perhaps better than before the reason for anomalies in the national character. We may perceive in the individual Irishman, it may be, the contest still going on between Aryan and Ugrian, between Iran and Turan. Have we not here a clue to contradictions in Irish natures, their fiery threats and actual peaceableness, their turbulence and relative freedom from crime, their reputation for ferocity among those who do not know them, and the charm they exercise through kindness and hospitality when treated with regard?

It is not fanciful to trace here the singular mixture of sharpness and stupidity in the peasant, nor will it be found on reflection hazardous to assert that the Irish owe to the sturdy, plodding Ugrian element their ability to support suffering and their dogged love for the soil—traits hitherto given to the Kelt, although history is full of examples of the Keltic passion for roving about the world. It is an element that gives the counterpoise to the hot headiness natural to those in whom Keltic blood is strong; it explains the caution of many Scots and Irishmen; for both are apt to talk with violence, but to act with great circumspection. It may also supply the sad, poetical side of the Irish. It accounts, best of all, for their essential law abiding character when humanely treated, their freedom from crimes other than agrarian, to which the latest trials in London bear testimony. It may offer an explanation for the petty though vindictive nature of misdemeanors like moonlighting, loughing cattle and destroying crops—traits which seem foreign to the Keltic genius.—Charles de Kay in Century.

Much Improved.

A well known western orator is fond of telling the following story about himself—a story which gives proof of the fact that many unpromising boys develop into famous and brilliant men. He had given his finest and most carefully prepared lecture for the benefit of a small library in his native town.

At the close of the lecture he was approached by an old man, who offered his hand, and said: "How do you do, Henry? Don't know me, do you?"

"No, I don't think I do."

"Well, I know you, Henry. I've known you ever since you wuz knee high to a duck, en' I think you done yourself credit to-night, Henry, spashly when I kin remember the time when it didn't 'pear to me that you had sense enough to come in when it rained; you wuz the greenest gourd 'bout twenty year ago, you reely wuz!"—Youth's Companion.

He Turned Out to Be a Politician.

It is very hard to understand the boys. A great many years ago a resident of Portland had a son who showed no special aptitude for a business, and he was puzzled what to do with him. He concluded to try an experiment, so he locked the boy in a room where there were only a Bible, an apple and a dollar. A few minutes later he stole quietly to the room. He made up his mind that if he found the boy eating the apple he would make a good farmer. If he were reading the Bible he should be trained for the pulpit, and if he had taken the money his success as a broker, the father thought, was assured. Upon entering the room he found the boy sitting upon the Bible eating the apple, with the dollar in his pocket. That boy is now a county politician.—Oregon Times.

He Scattered.

A respectable man went to the cars one day to see his favorite daughter off. Securing her a seat he passed out of the cars and went round to her window to say a parting word. While he was passing out the daughter left the seat to speak to a friend, and at the same time a grim old maid took the seat and moved up to the window. Unaware of the important change he hurriedly put his face up to the window and said: "One more kiss, sweet pet!" In another instant the point of a sweet umbrella was thrust from the window, followed by the pious injunction: "Scat, you gray headed wretch!" He scattered.—Yarmouth Times.

Bad blood causes dyspepsia and dyspepsia reacts by causing bad blood. So both go on, growing worse, until the whole system is poisoned. The surest means of relief for the victim is a thorough and persistent course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

On Tuesday two men named Dulmage and Price and another were driving across the Tamworth bridge in a cutter, when their horse choked and fell over the side of the bridge into the water. One of the young men went over with the rig, but escaped without serious damage. As the horse came down on its back, and was attached to the cutter it was with difficulty rescued and was nearly perished.

Miss Beattie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., had a disease of the scalp which caused her hair to become very harsh and dry and to fall so freely she scarcely dared comb it. Ayer's Hair Vigor gave her a healthy scalp, and made the hair beautifully thick and glossy.

MISCELLANY.

Degeneration of the Human Teeth.

The law of retardation exhibits itself in the teeth of the higher races of mankind in a highly inconvenient manner, says Popular Science Monthly. The greatly developed brain requires all the available room in the skull; there is no space left for the attachment of muscles for a powerful jaw. Cooked food also causes degeneration in the development of the jaw. There is consequently no room left for either the wisdom teeth or the second upper incisors; the wisdom teeth are retarded, often cause great pain, and decay early. The second incisors appear in startling and unexpected places, and often (in America especially) do not cut the gum at all. Professor Gage says that "American dentists have observed that the third molar teeth (wisdom teeth) are in natives of the United States very liable to imperfect growth or suppression, and to a degree entirely unknown among savage or even many civilized races." The same suppression had been observed in the outer pair of superior incisors. This is owing, not only to a reduction in the size of the arches of the jaws, but to successively prolonged delay in the appearance of the teeth. In the same way, men and the man like apes have fewer teeth than the lower monkeys, and these again fewer than the insectivorous mammals to which they are most nearly allied. When this difference in dentition has been established, civilized man may claim to place himself in a new species, apart from low savages as well as from high apes.

The Air Was New to Her.

Young Wife (at the theatre)—Now, John, what did you go out for? Husband—To get a breath of air, dear. Young Wife (after considering the matter a while)—Well, John, there wasn't any air on my father's farm that smelled like that.—Buffalo Post.

Chicago Fire Bells.

"Do you see that old photograph hanging up there?" asked a man in Clayton's place yesterday. "Well," he continued, "that is the old court house—the ruins of it after the great fire of 1871, I mean. Up in that shattered tower hung the big bell. Of course, it fell when the flames destroyed its supports. I don't know whether Harry Everhart caught it or not as it fell, but he was scart on the ground and secured the debris. Before the fire was out he had purchased the remains of the bell and had arranged to have the bell metal molded into small bells as 'relics of the fire.' Every one around town soon wore upon his watch chain a tinkling reminder of the big disaster. At first these miniature bells sold for $1.50 each, and every one was accompanied by a certificate attesting its genuineness. The depot for these little bells was in an old dwelling, in the brick block at the northeast corner of Wabash avenue and Harmon street. I would not say that Harry 'watered the stock' exactly, but he sold thousands of small bells—more, in fact, than it would seem could be molded from the big court house bell. Pretty soon, as the novelty wore off, the price went down, and finally you could buy a small court house bell relic for a quarter."—Chicago Herald.

Church Choirs.

The church choirs today are not what they were in the olden times. The singing is not in that religious vein that unites the heart with God. There is too much singing for style, or, to better express it, for the exhibition to the congregation of fine voices. There is altogether too much talk in the choirs, and not enough attention to the religious services. Not one half of the praise given to the Almighty in song meets His approbation; on the contrary, it must be displeasing. This order of things has almost grown to be universal throughout the Christian world. To my mind, the day of choirs is not to last always. I believe that the time is coming when the singing will be done by the congregation.—Father Bourke in Globe-Democrat.

Relief from Sorrow.

Gardening is recommended as a means of relief from sorrow by a writer, who mentions a good woman whose sorrows seemed piled mountain high through the loss by death within a few months of her husband and child and of property as well. Trained to no work as a girl, she seemed helpless. But her little garden demanded attention, and her losses compelled her to work with her hands. Here, too, the soothing balm of pure air, exercise and occupation worked its marvels in recovering health, contentment and a spirit of self-helpfulness.—New York Telegram.

Professor Henry says on the much vexed question of cooked, wet or dry feed for hogs: "In conducting experiments with cooked and uncooked feed, it was found that a hog would eat more uncooked feed than cooked, and in these experiments we note that he ate more wet feed than dry feed. Since we desire him to eat the maximum quantity per day, it would seem that in some cases at least wet feed is superior to cooked feed on the one hand and dry feed on the other. Such seems to be the status of the important question of how to prepare feed for swine at the present time."

Mrs. Margaret Wilson Oliphant, the novelist, better known simply as Mrs. Oliphant, is now 60 years of age. She makes her home in the town of Windsor, adjoining Queen Victoria's favorite palace. The fact that she is a Scotch woman has made her quite a favorite of the queen, who reads all her novels and takes every occasion to praise their healthy, moral tone.

Useful Walking Sticks.

Walking sticks are now being made that are useful as well as ornamental. From one a silk umbrella can be drawn and served to the cane; another has a receptacle for nickels and cents, and is convenient for those who ride on street and other city cars and cross ferries; another contains a measure for the height of horses and has a spirit level attachment, and still another has a good little watch set in the crystal handle.—Chicago Times.
