ONE WAY TO PUT IT.

"Well, Pat, what part of the house are you living in?" "Shure, sir, if the house was upside down I would be livin' on the first flure."—Irish Wit and Wisdom.

THE SNAKE LEGEND IN FULL.

Why It Is Believed—The Reason Why Snakes Cannot Exist in Ireland.

The question is often asked, Why is the legend of the banishment of snakes inseparably connected with the name of St. Patrick in every land, and that faith in it has outlasted faith in nearly all the other miracles of St. Patrick?

Simply because a great fact supports it—there are no snakes in Ireland and no other reptiles which live in and on the earth. There are frogs which live entirely in water, as there are fish, but the soul is, in time, fatal even to imported reptiles which are placed in it. The "lepraucan," or "lepraucan," a sort of lizard, lives almost entirely above ground, in the crevices of stone fences and timbers.

As everybody has heard the legend and very few have seen it in its original form, it is here presented verbatim:

"Even from the time of its original inhabitants did Hibernia labor under a three fold plague: a swarm of poisonous creatures, whereof the number could not be counted, a concourse of demons visibly appearing, and a multitude of magicians. And these venomous and monstrous creatures rising out of the earth and out of the sea, so prevailed over the whole island that they not only wounded men and animals with their deadly stings, but slayed them with cruel bitings, and not seldom rent and devoured their members: And often was beheld such a multitude of these, flying in the air, or on the earth, that the island was deemed incapable of containing so many; wherefore it was accounted the habitation of demons and their peculiar possession.

"And the most holy Patrick applied all his diligence to the extirpation of this threefold plague, and at length, by his salutary doctrine and fervent prayer, he relieved Hibernia of the increasing mischief. Therefore he, the most excellent pastor, bore on his shoulder the staff of Jesus, and aided of the angelic band he, by its comminatory elevation, gathered together from all parts of the island all the poisonous creatures into one place, then compelled them all on to a very high promontory, which then was called Cruachanille (Patrick's crag), and by the power of his word he drove the whole pestilent swarm from the precipice of the mountain headlong into the ocean. O eminent sign! O illustrious miracles! Then turned he to Mannia and the other islands and by the power of his prayer, he freed all those likewise from the venomous reptiles. But other islands which had not believed at his preaching, are still cursed with procreation of those poisonous creatures."

Pliny on Three Leaved Plants.

One strong reason for the esteem and veneration in which the shamrock is held by the Irish people is that when preaching the doctrine of the Trinity to the pagan Irish St. Patrick used this plant, bearing three leaves upon one stem, as a symbol or illustration of the great mystery. In view of the good saint's association with the shamrock and with snakes it is worthy of note that the Latin writer Pliny, in his "Natural History," says that serpents are never seen upon the three leaved plant, and that it is an antidote to the stings of snakes and scorpions.

A Seemingly Natural Question.

Stranger—Will you tell me, sir, if I am half way to Badgerstown?" Irishman—Faith an' I will if you tell me where you started from."—Erin's Smiles.

The Symbol of the Trinity.

The shamrock is almost universally worn in the hat all over Ireland on St. Patrick's day. The popular notion is that when St. Patrick was teaching the doctrine of the Trinity to the Pagan Irish he used the plant having three leaves upon one stem as a symbol or illustration of the great mystery. The Irish had ascribed mystical virtues to the shamrock, and on hearing of the Trinity for the first time they fancied some peculiar fitness in their already sacred plant to shadow forth the newly revealed mysterious doctrine. Hence the song of the poet and the toast of every true Irishman:

Long may the shamrock— The plant that blooms forever— With the rose combined, And the thistle twined, Defy the strength of foes to sever. Firm be the triple league they form, Despite all change of weather; In sunshine, darkness, calm and storm, Still may they fondly grow together.

The Egg vs. the Horseshoe.

There is an old Irish superstition to the effect that if an egg laid on St. Patrick's day be hung to the roof of a house it will preserve it and its inmates from all harm during the ensuing year, and advising maidens to pray "cross-legged" to St. Patrick on the morning of his birthday, that he will grant them his aid in securing a good husband.
