BROADBRIM'S LETTER.

ONE OF THE GREAT TEMPERANCE CRUSADES OF THE DAY.

It is Conducted by The Catholic Clergy—The Fashionable Fads in the Church—A Very Funny Incident—The Sufferings of Mrs. Langtry—The Sympathy Shown by the Reporters.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, March 22.—Never since the great Washington excitement of 1842 has New York experienced such a remarkable temperance revolution as that which is now upon us. It is no secret that some of the vilest and lowest drinking places in the city are conducted by Irishmen who were nominally Catholics, and this was felt to be a libel on the respectable portion of our Irish population and a scandal on the Catholic church. Archbishop Corrigan is a man of very pronounced opinions, and very sensitive on any point that affects the welfare or character of the Catholic church. Among the clergy here there are scores of men who were worthy to have stood by Father Matthew in the hour of his greatest triumph. Among these are Father Hare, Father Frasioli, and many others equally eminent. Temperance leagues are being formed in all the churches, and meetings are held every Sunday evening and through the week.

The officers are mostly laymen, but the working power is the priesthood, and it looks like the beginning of a great crusade which may yet shake the United States from centre to circumference. The archbishop has given it his sanction and hearty cooperation, and all the meetings are so crowded that hundreds have to go away. New meetings are being organized by the Catholic churches all over the city, and thousands of the keepers of those low saloons and dives will either have to shut up shop or get out of the Catholic church.

Our latest fashionable fad now is tableaux. Not but that we have had tableaux before, but we have had no such tableaux as are now delighting New York and Brooklyn. Last year we did a Greek play with a chorus, and the ladies who figured therein thought that they looked so pretty in the costume of Lias, Aspasia, and Phryne that they quite forgot that those ladies enjoyed in their day a very unsavoury reputation, which even their association with the old philosophers could not bolster up, and while their gowns were very good their morals were very bad. But this appeared to make no difference with the ladies. So Phryne gowns became all the go. Now we have made a step in advance, and last week we gave at Palmer's theatre a tableau from "Ben Hur." As a general thing we relegate tableaux to Sunday school and church entertainments as a mild form of dissipation to those who would be horrified to hear the characters speak on the stage of a theatre. The "Ben Hur" tableaux drew together a most fashionable and enthusiastic audience, and it looks now as though these tableaux would become a fashionable fad all over the country.

While on the subject of tableaux let me not forget those given by the African Methodist Episcopal church, if Brooklyn, over which presides the Rev. Mr. Christmas. Brother Christmas is a hard-working laborer in the Lord's vineyard, but I regret to add that Brother Christmas's congregation, forgetful of that divine declaration, that "the laborer is worthy of his hire," neglected to give to Caesar the things which were Caesar's, and as a consequence it left Brother Christmas at outs with the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker. That "a man can not live by bread alone" is true, so it is equally true that in these wicked latter days he finds faith alone very unsubstantial board. Some of the trustees had taken offence at Brother Christmas's course in the late election. The Sunday after Harrison's nomination Brother Christmas prayed that he might be the Moses to lead the coloured people out of the land of bondage. Brother Brown, who is a trustee and keeps a first-class barber shop, and who had just been elected president of the Young Men's Coloured Democratic Cleveland and Thurman club, rose in his pew and said, "that he did not want no politics inter-coming with his religion, that he would take his straight every time," and he cautioned the pastor not to forget it. The warning was lost on Brother Christmas, and he continued to pray for Harrison, and it is evident that the Lord answered his prayer for Harrison was elected. Then Brother Brown got mad. With the defeat of Cleveland the young men's democratic club went to flinders, and the president and the other two members of the club were left out in the cold.

Brother Brown, as trustee, used to pass the contribution box on Sunday; but he declared that he wasn't a' going to pass no contribution box for no political preacher, and, as I said before, Brother Christmas got badly left. But Brother Christmas, besides being an indefatigable Christian worker, is a man of ready resources so it occurred to him that he could replenish his exchequer by giving a series of bible tableaux in the church. The departure of the Ten Tribes, Joseph and his brethren, Jacob's Ladder with myriads of little colored angels ascending and descending; and, by the way, it is singular how the delusion ever gained foothold that all angels are white. But the most interesting tableau of the week was the sacrificing of Isaac by Abraham. Isaac was represented by a little colored Christian who came out in his night shirt carrying a bundle of wood. Then the lights were turned down, and Brother Christmas sang out Abraham, hol' dyhan; then the lights were turned up, and Isaac hopped down from the altar, for Abraham had discovered a leg of lamb in a basket all nicely roasted, which the congregation forthwith proceeded to sacrifice, for the considerate angel above had put some crackers and ham sandwiches in the basket, so that Abraham and Isaac were able to have quite a nice launch after their morning's walk up the mountain.

But there is a class of people on whom the most sacred lessons make no impressions, and I am sorry to say several of these are to be found in Brother Christmas's congregation. As soon as the sacrificial leg of roast lamb was brought out of the basket, and Abraham and Isaac proceeded to demolish it, some of the profane wretches began to titter and laugh, but one of the deacons got back on them and said: "Yes, yes, you may laugh now, you may laugh now; but bimeby you'll all be a' larfin on de other side of your mouf, yes you will." And Brother Christmas reminded them that it was a very solemn ceremony, and a perfect representation of how the patriarchs conducted their sacrifices eighteen hundred and eighty-nine years ago! The next tableau will be King Solomon's temple, all covered over with solid gold, and ice-cream thrown in for fifteen cents. I rejoice to add that the tableaux are a financial success.

You who read of the crowded houses and the applause and the bouquets, etc., know little of the trials and sufferings of those women who represent the talent and genius of the American and English stage. For two or three weeks Mrs. Langtry has been trying to act in a condition of health that would have sent nine women out of ten, or ninety-nine out of a hundred, to a lunatic asylum. She is the victim of a terrible catarrhal affection which makes her life as miserable as it really can be. One painful operation has succeeded another, and these are by no means certain of success. The only pleasant thing connected with her great misfortune is the sympathy of the reporters of the daily papers. They begin ringing her bell at four o'clock in the morning to hear if there is any change in her symptoms, and they keep it up at intervals of every five minutes till two o'clock in the next morning.

Young men from eighteen to twenty two are usually detailed for this kind of business, and the only thing likely to militate against their professional advancement is their modesty. On being assured that Mrs. Langtry is too ill to receive them—they express themselves quite willing to wait in the parlor till she recovers, if the waiter will bring them a good cigar and the morning paper. Mrs. Langtry is a very sick woman, and although the rumour is abroad that she was married to Freddy Gebhart two weeks ago, she looks now, like anything but a bride.

Mary Anderson, too, has broken down; the terrible tension to which the poor human machine was subjected was too much for even her magnificent physique, and she is forced to abandon her playing. Let us hope that rest may restore her transcendent power, and spare her still to adorn the stage.

Wonderful to relate Mrs. Potter who, physically is scarcely a shadow alongside the two women named, has come through her trying ordeal as fresh as a daisy, after raking in all the shekels that New York has got to spare with Antony and Cleopatra, has taken possession of the magnificent Amphion theatre in Brooklyn, and the box sheet is filled for a week. Speaking of the Amphion theatre, it is one of the finest dramatic structures on either side of the river. Up to two years ago Brooklyn had no place where first class opera could be produced, except the academy of music, and that was handicapped by 250 free seats for the stockholders. This was ruinous to managers, so the Amphion was put up, and after a brief season passed into the hands of the enterprising managers Knowles and Morris, who also hold the beautiful grand opera house. This has completely revolutionized theatrical matters in Brooklyn, which now gets all that New York has. Booth and Barrett play here shortly, and as their connection draws to a close the engagement promises to be one of the most remarkable ever seen in Brooklyn.

The committee to which has been assigned the task of selecting plans for the new Episcopal cathedral have been busy all the week, and as the cost may run up into the millions the necessity of careful judgment is most important. For many years the question has been discussed as to the necessity of having a grand cathedral in New York, and the matter took definite shape two or three years ago. At no time has there been any lack of funds to carry out the plan, for aside from the wealth of the different church corporations, individual donations have been guaranteed sufficient to cover all possible cost of the contemplated structure. The most magnificent church building on Manhattan Island to day is St. Patrick's cathedral, though the Catholic church has many other splendid churches, but it is safe to say that when the Episcopal cathedral is finished there will be no finer building for God's worship on the American continent if in the world.

The meeting closed with thanks to the lecturer.

CONFLICT WITH CATAMOUNTS.

Four Boys Have an Awful Experience—Hunt Not Looked For.

GUZANNE, W. Va., March 23.—Four boys, James and Thomas Loftus, and Henry and Frank Mitches, sons of farmers living near the foot of McLane mountain, Wyoming county, were out squirrel hunting yesterday, and when returning home one of them shot a squirrel which fell into a deep fissure in the mountain side. When they descended the fissure to get the squirrel they saw four pairs of yellow eyes glaring at them from a recess in the rock. Only two of the boys had guns, and when they had fired at two pairs of the yellow eyes shutting them, the owners of the other two pairs, who proved to be enormous wild cats, sprang at the lads. With empty guns and clubs they finally succeeded in killing the catamounts, but not before one boy had been terribly torn from his neck to his hips. Another had his cheek and one ear laid open, while a third was badly bitten through his right arm and scratched across the chest by the sharp claws of one of the catamounts. After the battle was over the only one of the quartette unharmed climbed to the surface and managed to haul and drag his comrades one by one after him. The boys are all doing well and will be out again in a few days. The largest catamount measured four feet six inches in length. The other three were full grown females.

GREAT STORM AT SEA.

An Experience Such as is Seldom Had—The Records of the Seamen.

BALTIMORE, March 23.—The steamers which arrived here yesterday report terrible experiences in the storm of Wednesday night and Thursday off cape Henry and Hatteras. The North German Lloyd steamship America, with 700 emigrants, while passing Cape Henry was struck by a storm. The hatches were battened down and two of the officers remained among the terrified Germans endeavoring to allay their fears. John Gilt, a seaman, was hurled across the deck. Internal hemorrhage ensued and the man died. The steamship Pirata, from Antonio, encountered the storm off the North Carolina coast. Captain Graham says he thought the sea would twist his vessel in pieces, and at one time all on board thought the ship was foundering. Captain Graham had a rib broken by being thrown to the deck by a big wave.

THE POPE'S POSITION.

Cardinal Gibbons Says His Holiness Won't Leave Rome at Present.

BALTIMORE, March 22.—In reference to the remark of Cardinal Parocchi, at a banquet in Rome, on Tuesday, that if the pope should find it necessary to leave Europe at some future day he would find an honorable hospitality from the American bishops, Cardinal Gibbons said yesterday that Cardinal Parocchi's expression was no doubt meant as a tribute to the hospitable spirit of the American bishops, clergy and people. "For" said Cardinal Gibbons, "there is scarcely any foundation for the statement so often made that the pope will leave Rome. The papacy is too intimately connected by past associations and memorable events to make the pope's removal from Rome at all probable. The same reports were circulated as long ago as the time of Archbishop Eccleston."

A large assemblage had gathered at the church, but the ceremony had to be postponed.
